Careers Advice

Four professionals offer advice for people starting new careers.

A Gabi, brand manager

Before moving into my current role, I worked in graphic design. However, having had the chance to work on various branding projects, I was desperate to get involved in brand management. Since I hadn't studied business or marketing like most brand managers, I had to prove myself by taking on new tasks at every opportunity. In my opinion, you should always be prepared to go out of your comfort zone because it helps you expand your range of skills and experience. You might feel uncomfortable doing it, but it's the best way to advance your career, no matter what your qualifications are. Another piece of advice for anyone thinking of going into brand management is not to worry too much about what others think about you. As long as you strive to do your best, it doesn't matter if you make mistakes. The truth is that our mistakes can teach us a great deal and we shouldn't get embarrassed when things go wrong.

B Mohamed, photographer

Some people think that being a photographer means working alone. The reality, though, is that photography is often a collaborative effort. Whether you're working with other professionals, like models and stylists, or with your clients, you need to be on the same wavelength as them. I was recently on a photo shoot and I just couldn't click with the model. We both ended up tearing our hair out and we had to abandon the shoot because we weren't getting anywhere. Another thing that's worth bearing in mind is that photography can be all-consuming. In general, we're taught about the importance of maintaining a healthy work–life balance. However, if you want to be successful, photography has to be your life. It's not like a 9–5 job, which you can switch on and off, because you never know when you'll get the chance for that perfect shot. That's why you're unlikely to ever find a professional photographer without a camera.

C Natalia, architect
Having graduated from university with a degree in architecture, I thought it would be a piece of cake to find a job. However, I didn't realise how competitive the sector is and I was beginning to have second thoughts. In the end, I stuck with it and I managed to find a job, but it almost cost me my health. I'm happy to learn new skills, but you should be able to develop at your own pace. If you're constantly being asked to do new things, it can become overwhelming. For that reason, you should always place clear limits about what you're prepared to do. In my case, there was so much pressure to take on tasks which I hadn't been trained for that it pushed me to my limits. It felt like work was consuming my entire life. No matter what you do, try to keep your career in perspective. It's only one part of your life and you shouldn't forget the things that really give your life meaning, like your family and friends.

D Jaime, mathematician
I work as a mathematician for an insurance company so I spend much of my time analysing data and trying to forecast the likelihood of future events. In the past, that would have been carried out with a pen and paper, but nowadays we use Machine Learning (ML) algorithms. You might think it's a solitary job, but it's absolutely essential to be a team player. You have to work with different departments, so good communication skills are invaluable. It's not an easy job and, even though university provides you with knowledge of the subject, it doesn't really give you the practical skills. The only way to acquire them is on the job and things are bound to go wrong from time to time. In fact, just after starting, I miscalculated one of my forecasts and made a costly error. I was kicking myself at the time, but I've since learnt to embrace failure and treat it as an opportunity for learning. That's the most useful piece of advice I could give anyone who's starting a new career.

4 Read the article again. Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

1 Gabi was determined to switch from graphic design to brand management. T / F
2 Gabi's experience in business and marketing was invaluable in getting her a new job. T / F
3 Mohamed advises against having close relationships with the people you work with. T / F
4 Mohamed thinks photographers should avoid restricting their working day to fixed times. T / F
5 Natalia almost changed her mind about pursuing a career in architecture. T / F
6 Jaime finds it easier to work with traditional tools rather than complicated computer instructions. T / F
7 Jaime has never regretted making a mistake with one of his predictions. T / F
