Ex 6
Example answer:
Introduction
The aim of this proposal is to modernise the facilities in the school so that students and teachers are encouraged to make better use of their time there.

The existing situation
The classrooms currently contain too much furniture and much of it is not used. For example, the cupboards for storing paper and other materials are mostly empty. At the same time, there are a lot of individual desks which are old and heavy, which means it is difficult to move them. Much of the time, students are expected to work in groups, but it is not practical for them to put the desks together. As a result, students tend to push the desks to the back of the classroom to create more space. Furthermore, students frequently complain that the chairs are uncomfortable and do not provide sufficient support.

Proposed improvements
The plan is to remove the old cupboards and desks from the classrooms. These will be replaced by lighter, more modern desks with storage space underneath. These desks can be easily put together to create a larger, more collaborative workspace. The addition of new chairs will also help to ensure students' comfort. Finally, the classroom will be refurbished with a modern interactive whiteboard and laptop connections in order to have a paperless classroom.

Conclusion
The changes proposed above will modernise the classroom and make it more sustainable and learner-friendly. With a more minimalist approach design, the classrooms will be more comfortable and inspiring spaces. This will help students focus on their work and learn more effectively.

SPEAKING

Ex 1

Example answer:

Whereas both pictures show people spending time with friends, the first picture shows a group of older men who have been playing tennis. I imagine they've just finished a match because they're leaving the court with their towels and rackets. I can't be sure, but they could be retired so this might be an activity they do to stay fit and socialise with friends. They seem to be enjoying themselves so they're probably on the same wavelength as each other. It's important to spend time with people you get on well with because it's good for your mental health. The people seem to be getting on well in the second picture, too, but perhaps they aren't all close friends. It looks like a party so perhaps people are meeting each other for the first time. This type of party, with a barbecue, is a good opportunity to meet new people and you can see that some people have hit it off. Although they aren't as active as the men in the first picture, just hanging around with friends is relaxing and enjoyable, too.

Ex 2

Example answer:

It's difficult to say which experience would be better for helping people to bond with each other. Partying can be a good way of meeting new people in a relaxing atmosphere. However, I think having a mutual interest like tennis and practising it together might be better for helping people to bond. That's because if you do it regularly, you're more likely to become close friends and you're more likely to confide in them.

Example answer:

From the bitter rivalry of football teams to pupils outdoing each other in exams, competition is everywhere in children's lives. We have been told that it helps them fulfil their true potential. Nevertheless, some people argue that competition may be harmful for social and emotional development. Is competition really bad for children?

Many people believe that competition is healthy because it helps to prepare children for the competitive world of adults. They reject the view that it encourages a 'win at all costs' attitude and point out that it can help young people develop values of empathy, trust and hard work. Not only that, but competition can be fun, which is why most games have a competitive element. As long as you play fair, there's no shame in coming out on top.

These are strong arguments in favour of letting children experience competition. Yet, research has shown that competition does not always have positive effects. In one study, for example, it was shown to decrease motivation, and some children took losing especially badly. It also led to rivalry within groups and a sense of inequality. If the aim is to motivate the whole group, competition doesn't always seem to be the best way of achieving it.

Competitiveness is not good or bad, it's just one of the ways in which we behave. However, if we choose to use it to help children fulfil their potential, we must use it carefully. We should promote healthy competition, which is based on respect, empathy and teamwork.

SPEAKING

Ex 1

Example answer:

Both pictures show people cheating. In the first picture, there are some children playing a game of cards, while in the second picture, there are some students taking an exam. The children are lying on the floor in their garden or in a park. You can also see an adult to the right of the picture, sitting in a chair, reading a book. He appears to be looking after them so I suppose it could be their father. The girl seems to be choosing which card to play, but the boy is secretly looking at her cards. He might be cheating on purpose because he wants to win the game or maybe he just can't help looking. In the other picture, however, a young man is trying to look at a young woman's examination paper. She's busy concentrating and he's taking advantage to see what she's writing. The other students seem to have realised that he's cheating because they're looking at him. I guess the man doesn't know the answer to the question or he doesn't have much confidence in his own abilities and that's why he's decided to cheat.

Ex 2

Example answer:

In my experience, it's better to be honest in most situations. If a child cheats in a game, the other children will think it's unfair and they're likely to get upset. I've seen this happen with my own children! Meanwhile, if students cheat in exams, the other students are also likely to think that it's unfair on them, especially if they've worked hard. They might ask themselves why they've worked if the person who's cheating hasn't. On balance, I'd say it's more important for the students to be honest because they should know better, whereas the children are still learning about fairness and honesty.

SPEAKING
Ex 1
Example answer:
Both of the pictures show people having a conversation, although the situations are very different. In the first picture, there are two men who seem to be builders or architects. They're standing in the room of a house and it looks like they're modernising the building. They could be discussing the progress of the work or making a decision about the work they need to carry out. In contrast, the second picture shows some people walking in the countryside. There are two people chatting in the foreground and there's another person walking in the background. I'm not sure whether the people who are talking are friends. I get the impression they've just met and they're probably making small talk. They might be talking about the countryside or the weather, or some other topic that helps people connect.

Ex 2
Example answer:
I think the people in the first picture are probably colleagues so their professional relationship probably means that their discussion is related to their job. Nevertheless, they're dressed quite informally, which suggests that their conversation might not be as formal as a business meeting. In the second picture, however, the people are meeting in a social context so their conversation is likely to be quite informal. At the same time, I don't think they know each other well, so they will probably avoid personal topics or ones which might cause arguments.

WRITING

Ex 5
Example answer:
Fair play is seen as an important value in our society, which is why schools are keen to show children how to participate in sports and other activities fairly. In fact, it's so important that the world's largest football association runs a global campaign to promote it.

One of the main roles of schools is to prepare children to be the citizens of tomorrow. In order to do that, they need to be respectful of others, show a positive attitude and be disciplined. Furthermore, if pupils display this attitude at school, there will be a more pleasant atmosphere. They won't achieve any of this if their attitude is to win at all costs.

The first step to fair play is making sure that there are clear rules and all the pupils understand them. This applies to classroom activities as well as sports. They also need to be taught why it's important to play fair and that they won't get away with it if they break the rules. One reason people cheat is because they might be ashamed of losing. For that reason, it's essential to show pupils that it's possible to lose at something and still hold their head up – as long as they've played fair.

Professional sports tend to promote the idea of fair play, which has been invaluable in spreading the message. Nevertheless, there have been many cases of athletes cheating in major sporting events. Given the influence of professional sports, no one must be allowed to bend the rules in order to come out on top.

Example answer:
One of the most disappointing films I've ever seen is 'War of the Worlds', directed by Steven Spielberg. Based on the disturbing H.G. Wells novel written in 1898, this version has been updated for the 21st century and stars Tom Cruise.

Whereas the original story was set in London in the nineteenth century, the action now takes place in the modern-day United States. While the director strives to follow the original storyline as far as possible, the modern setting is a major disappointment. Part of the appeal of the novel is the contrast between the superior technology of the aliens and 19th-century Londoners who are still travelling with horses. They are clearly the underdogs in the battle for survival, and it is far from clear that they will survive, whereas we know from the beginning that Tom Cruise is unlikely to die.

At the same time, some elements of the storyline in this updated version are frustrating. The director's decision to focus on the family's relationship did little to win me over as they are shallow and unconvincing. Moreover, it is a distraction from some of the more interesting elements of the story. In fact, the characterisations are generally lazy throughout the film.

Some of the tension of the original novel is still there. However, the film tends to rely on special effects and violence to achieve it. This film may appeal to fans of Hollywood action movies, but my recommendation would be to read the original novel instead.

Ex 1

Example answer:
Both of the pictures show people learning new skills. In the first picture, a girl is learning to sew with a machine, while in the second picture a young woman is learning to drive. It looks like the girl is being taught to sew by an older woman. I'm not sure whether she's the girl's mother or someone else, like a teacher or an employer. It's difficult to tell where they are, but they don't seem to be in a classroom so they could be at home or in a design studio. On the other hand, the woman learning to drive is probably being taught by a driving instructor. He seems to be using a tablet and he looks quite professional. The woman looks quite confident so maybe she's going to take her driving test soon. I think the first woman is learning to sew because she's interested in fashion. By learning to sew, she can make her own clothes. In contrast, the second woman is learning to drive because it's a useful life skill which gives you more independence and the chance to travel more easily.

© 2023 Pearson PHOTOCOPIABLE

Ex 2
Example answer:
I imagine that learning to use a sewing machine can be quite difficult so it's important to be motivated. It looks like the woman in the background is encouraging because she's smiling and helping the younger woman. That's important because it's easier to learn new skills when you're motivated. Similarly, the woman who's learning to drive also needs to be motivated and encouraged. Learning to drive can be frustrating and overwhelming, especially if there's a lot of pressure from the instructor. Therefore, the instructor needs to show understanding and make sure the learner isn't on edge.

Example answer:
The sports centre has suffered falling membership in recent years and, as a consequence, the managers are considering a rebranding campaign. The sports centre is currently seen as unfashionable with the younger generation. The aim would be to rebrand the sports centre as a modern, dynamic place. The campaign would take place over a year and the total cost is estimated to be €50,000. Membership of the sports centre has been decreasing for several years and, as a result, revenues have been falling, too. Young adults between the ages of 18 and 30 are the group whose membership has been falling most quickly. It is therefore vital that the sports centre attracts new members from this generation to avoid the problem becoming worse in future. Creating a more modern image for the sports centre, which appeals to young people, is a realistic way to solve this problem.

Although a rebranding campaign would offer many benefits for the sports centre, some opposition has been expressed, especially by members of staff. They feel that the money could be better spent on increasing their wages rather than paying for this campaign. There has also been some criticism from older members who are concerned about the effects an increase in younger members might have on the centre and their enjoyment of it.

The plan to rebrand the sports centre seems to offer good value for money and a positive way forward. However, it is clear that there is a need for greater consultation with staff and members to ensure a broad base of support.

Example answer:

In both of these pictures, there are people taking photographs. In the first picture, there are two young women who seem to be sitting outside a café. I think they're on the terrace enjoying having drinks and cakes. They must be really pleased with the cakes because one of them is holding a cake up for a photograph, which the other is taking with her phone. I guess they're going to upload the photograph onto their social media account so they can share it with their friends. In contrast, the woman in the second picture appears to be a professional photographer. It's difficult to tell where she is, but I imagine she is at a sports match or maybe some sort of public event. She has a proper camera with a long lens, which she probably uses to zoom in on the subject of her photos. While the woman is in the foreground, there appears to be another photographer in the background. In her case, I'm sure she's taking photographs because it's her job.

Ex 2

Example answer:

It's obviously very important for the professional photographer's pictures to be good. She's probably a trained photographer and she knows how to take good pictures. She needs to know how to frame the subjects properly and the composition needs to be right. I guess she also has to make sure they're interesting because they might be in a newspaper or magazine. In the other situation, there's probably less pressure for the pictures to be good. However, some people take social media very seriously and they want people to get the best impression. They might even take different pictures so they can choose the best one, or they might edit the pictures with special effects.

Example answer:
The pictures show people reading in different situations. In the first picture, there are two people sitting in an elegant lounge, which could be in a hotel. The woman in the foreground is reading a magazine while the man in the background is reading a newspaper. It looks like the woman has just arrived or is just leaving because you can see her luggage. I get the impression she's reading in order to pass the time, so maybe she's waiting for a taxi or perhaps she's waiting for a meeting. In the second picture, there's a woman sitting on a sofa with two children and they're probably at home. I guess she's their mother. The woman seems to be reading a story to the children. She could be trying to teach them something or maybe she's entertaining them. The children seem quite engaged because they're looking closely at the book and one of them is pointing to something on the page.

Ex 2
Example answer:
It's difficult to say, but it seems more likely that the people in the first picture are reading to pass the time so that they don't get bored. They'd probably rather be doing something else rather than waiting in a hotel lounge. On the other hand, the mother probably sees this as a chance to encourage her daughters to read. Most parents want their children to be competent readers, so it's important to find time to help them. It might also be a relaxing way to spend time together, so I'd say that reading is more important in the second picture.

Ex 5
Example answer:
The book which has had the most profound effect on my life is 'David Copperfield' by Charles Dickens. Published in 1850, it is a classic novel which focuses on the development of the main character from childhood to adulthood. It is said to be part autobiography and reflects some of the difficulties the author faced in his own life.

The novel begins with David Copperfield wondering whether he will be the hero of his own story. The author then describes Copperfield's birth and how his father had died before he was born. Raised by his mother until the age of seven, Copperfield is sent away to school, and she dies when he is nine years old. From here we follow the ups and downs of his life as he becomes an adult.

What makes this novel special is the author's attention to detail in describing the events surrounding Copperfield's life as well as the variety of characters who play a part in it. At times, the story is tragic and some of the characters are quite disturbing. Nevertheless, the author's sense of humour makes it an extremely entertaining novel, which is hard to put down.

'David Copperfield' changed my life because it showed me that classic novels need not be boring and unreadable. In contrast to other novels of the nineteenth century, 'David Copperfield' is not concerned with the lives of the wealthy. Instead, the author paints a picture of Victorian England as experienced by ordinary people. Yet, while they may be ordinary people, their lives are far from boring.

Hi Alistair,
My friend Adam gave me your email address and suggested I get in touch. I believe you've recently been offered a job in my company and you've decided to take it. So, congratulations and welcome to the company! I'm sure you'll enjoy working there as much as I do. It's a fantastic company to work for because everyone's so friendly. They're all very cooperative and you don't get the sense of rivalry that you get in some companies. We love to hang around the photocopiers and have a chat, too. (Although maybe we chat a bit too much sometimes!)

I'm sure you're really busy getting used to your new job at the moment, but when you get the chance, why don't we meet up? It's a huge office, which takes some getting used to, but I can show you around a bit if you like. I can also introduce you to some of the people in my team so you feel more at home. My favourite place is the games room so maybe we can play some table football as well! We could meet up one lunchtime or at the end of the day, whatever suits you best.

What do you think? Reply here or send me a message on 058652 786438 and let me know.

Ex 1
Example answer:
While both of these pictures show people making decisions, the first shows a man looking at clothes in a shop. It's a more informal situation than the second picture which shows two men in a business context. The man in the clothes shop looks quite fashionable and he appears to be torn between several different shirts. I imagine he's thinking about which shirt suits him best and perhaps how fashionable it is. Meanwhile, the two businessmen appear to be looking at some large pieces of paper spread out on a table and trying to reach a decision. It's hard to say but they could be looking at some plans so they could be architects or engineers. If that were the case, they'd probably be thinking about whether the plans meet their client's needs, the cost of the project or some sort of problem that they need to overcome. It must be important because they're considering them very seriously.

Ex 2
Example answer:
If the man choosing shirts makes the wrong decision, the consequences are not likely to be too bad. It's just a shirt and he can change it if he wants to. However, it might be important to him if he wants to create the right impression with his clothes. On the other hand, the businessmen might have a more serious problem if they make the wrong decision because it could be very costly or it might upset a client. In business, it's generally acceptable to make small mistakes, but it's not good to make more serious ones.

To whom it may concern,

I am writing to express my considerable disappointment with the internet service I have recently signed up to. According to your website, not only is signing up to your service a straightforward process, but clients are also guaranteed to have no problems transferring from another internet provider.

In my case, this could not have been further from the truth. A technician who was scheduled to come to my house last week to install the router never arrived. As of today, there still has been no word from them. To make matters worse, I cancelled the service with my old provider last week because that was what your company asked me to do. As a result, I have been unable to access the internet for the last week. As someone who works from home, this situation is completely unacceptable. Every hour that I cannot work is an hour's earnings lost.

I am sure you understand my frustration at having wasted valuable time waiting for your technician to arrive when I could have been working. It would seem to me that your internet connection service is not fit for purpose. I therefore have no doubt that you will feel able to send a technician to my house in the next twenty-four hours and offer me a significant discount on my first three months' bills. I look forward to hearing from you soon on this matter.

SPEAKING

Ex 1

Example answer:

Both pictures show people who have made mistakes. In the first picture, there are two women and a man who seem to be in an office. Two of them are sitting in front of a laptop while one of the women is standing up and pointing at the screen. She looks annoyed whereas the other two people look worried, as if they've made a mistake. It's difficult to say exactly what type of mistake they've made, but it must be related to their business. It also looks like it's quite serious because of their facial expressions. In contrast, the second picture shows a woman sitting alone on the floor and she looks fed up. It looks like she's in an airport because of the style of the architecture. Her suitcase and handbag are next to her on the floor so I imagine she was planning on travelling somewhere but something has gone wrong. My guess would be that she's missed her flight because she got to the airport too late.

Ex 2

Example answer:

In the case of the first picture, I think the people will need to start their work again in order to put it right. For example, if they've miscalculated something, they'll have to recalculate it. Not only that, but their mistake might have affected their relationship with a business client. In that case, they'll need to apologise and find an acceptable solution. On the other hand, the woman in the second picture will probably need to book another flight. If it was her that was mistaken, she'll probably have to pay for the flight as well.

Example answer:
In both pictures, we can see people who have got problems. In the first picture, two people are standing in a rather elegant kitchen and there's a man who's trying to deal with a tap which is leaking water everywhere. He seems to be holding some sort of tool so he could be a plumber who's trying to fix the problem. He's got a look of panic on his face, while the woman standing in the background looks extremely worried. On the other hand, the second picture shows a man sitting on a sofa with a laptop in front of him. He's talking on the phone and looking at the computer with a concerned look on his face so I imagine something has gone wrong with it. It could be that he's using it to work from home, but the problem is stopping him working. I imagine he's talking to a helpline, but maybe they're not being very helpful. For that reason, he probably feels frustrated and wants to sort the problem out as quickly as possible.

Ex 2
Example answer:
I think both of these situations can be very stressful in their own way. A water leak in your house can be really stressful because it can cause a lot of damage. Not only that, but you need to deal with the problem quickly in order to limit the damage. Nevertheless, a computer problem can also be really stressful because we depend on them so much for our work and personal lives. We don't always have the technical skills to sort these sorts of problems out ourselves, and it's well known that you often have to wait a long time to get assistance from helplines.

To whom it may concern,

I am writing to express my considerable disappointment with the programming course I have recently signed up to. According to the information I was given, not only does the course include materials, but students are given access to an online learning platform.

It seems to me that this could not be further from the truth. The course materials which we have been given so far are badly made photocopies from textbooks. In no way are they connected with the topics we have studied in class. Furthermore, most of the photocopies are difficult to read and some of them are even missing parts of the text. Not only that, but the online learning platform is completely unacceptable. The exercises are dull and old-fashioned, and the platform does not follow your progress. It isn't reasonable to expect students to pay a lot of money for a platform which is basically useless.

I am sure you understand my frustration at having signed up to a course which has failed to meet my expectations. It would seem to me that your computer programming course is not fit for purpose. Learning should be engaging and motivating and this course has had the opposite effect on me. I therefore have no doubt that you will feel able to disenroll me from the course and offer me a full refund.
I look forward to hearing from you soon on this matter.

I'm a vegetarian and it's definitely not because I want to make people feel guilty. I do it because of the way the animals are treated. Most of them are bred in tiny cages and never get the chance to go outside. There's no way that's natural. Just because we've always eaten meat, does it mean we need to keep doing it? Also, it's simply not true that vegetarians aren't healthy. Most of us eat a much more balanced diet than meat eaters. You can't tell me that hamburgers and other junk food are good for you! And the other thing is that a vegetarian or vegan diet is much better for the environment because there aren't so many toxic emissions. IMHO we need more vegetarians!

I don't know why it bothers you that some people like buying second-hand clothes. Personally, I love looking for clothes that take me back to the 1990s. It's a way of expressing my identity and wearing something a bit different. If I bought high-street fashion, I'd just look like everyone else. The other thing is that I'm not trying to fool anyone. I wear things that make me feel good and I don't care what anyone else thinks. Maybe you're the one who's trying to be trendy? If you ask me, buying second-hand clothes is good for people like me who haven't got loads of money. It's also way better for the environment. The world might be a better place if people like you switched to buying second-hand clothes!

Ex 1
Example answer:
In the first picture, there's an older couple who appear to be sitting in their living room looking at photographs together. They could be looking at old family photographs or perhaps they're looking at photographs of their wedding day or some other important event. It looks like they're getting a lot of pleasure from the activity because they're both smiling and engaged. In contrast, the second picture shows an older woman and a young girl who appear to be colouring a picture. There's only one colouring book so I guess they're sharing the picture and the pencils. In the background, I can see more tables and chairs and someone is sitting at one of them. It could be a residence for old people and perhaps the girl is visiting her grandmother there. The older woman looks like she's concentrating hard on colouring in, while the girl seems to be more interested in the pencils. Although they don't exactly look happy, I think they're both engaged in the activity.

Ex 2
Example answer:
These activities are useful for taking us back to the past in different ways. Reminiscing over old photographs is very effective because images are a good way of activating our memories. It could be that you see a situation you'd forgotten about and the photo brings the memories back to you. Colouring in probably works differently because perhaps it doesn't help us recall memories, but maybe it makes us experience similar feelings that we had in childhood. In fact, it's known that colouring in helps you relax and focus in ways that many adults have forgotten to do. For that reason, the activity is often used with older people and people with memory problems.

Example answer:
It is clear that many more jobs will be automated. Shop assistants, travel agents and taxi drivers are likely to have disappeared by 2050. Technology will also revolutionise sectors such as education, medicine and law. Artificial intelligence will have taken on more of the tasks humans used to do, and do them more effectively. That said, not all of those sectors will change completely. We will still need teachers, nurses and lawyers, but they will have more time for the 'human' aspects of the job.

Technology should make our jobs easier, but it is likely that there will be resistance to change. Apart from needing to earn money to live, work also validates people's existence. Without the chance to work, people lack a sense of purpose. For that reason, people will need to be convinced to accept such changes. One way to do that is by offering them alternatives.

Alternatives to work might include a guaranteed income, which might be similar to the Universal Basic Income some economists are talking about. That would ensure that no one would go without food and shelter due to a lack of work. People would also need to be shown how to use the extra free time which they would suddenly have. This might involve providing more leisure facilities or encouraging people to take part in personal and social development activities.

In conclusion, I believe that many jobs will be automated and some people will become unemployed. However, if governments manage the transformation of the economy with care, it could represent a positive change.

are doing an experiment at school and their teacher is monitoring them. Both children are wearing safety glasses and the boy on the left is gathering some kind of liquid from a jar. It looks like he's about to mix it with something in a glass tube. Meanwhile, the girl on the right and the teacher are waiting for a reaction. I suppose they're doing the experiment as part of their science or chemistry class. However, the adults in the second picture are clearly doing an experiment in a scientific laboratory. You can tell this from the equipment which surrounds them and the type of room that it is. There are three people who I presume are scientists. The man in the foreground is also holding a jar with some substance in it. The three scientists are looking at it and I imagine they're also waiting for a reaction. They look quite serious so maybe they're carrying out an important experiment, like looking for a vaccine.

Ex 2
Example answer:
The boy probably needs to do the experiment carefully in order to get the right results. However, I don't imagine there will be any serious consequences if it goes wrong. The way the teacher is smiling and encouraging him suggests that the experience is more important than the results. I also think it's unlikely that they're working with hazardous materials. Similarly, I don't think there's any risk of something bad happening in the second picture because most of the scientists aren't wearing protective equipment. However, it's probably essential that they don't invalidate the results of the experiment, so they need to be very careful.

Both pictures show people using technology in their place of work or study. In the first picture, a teacher is standing next to a digital whiteboard. She seems to be helping a little girl who's also standing there and holding a digital pen. On the screen it looks like there are some counting exercises, so I presume the girl has to select the correct answer by touching the screen. Meanwhile, the second picture shows some doctors who are discussing something. They're all wearing protective clothing and there's a spotlight so I imagine they're performing an operation in surgery. One of the doctors is also wearing virtual reality glasses, which may be helping him with the operation. I'm not exactly sure how it can help, but maybe it makes it easier for him to see what he has to do. Alternatively, he could be doing remote surgery, although it looks like the patient might be there with him. I think the technology is important in both cases. The teacher probably finds it useful because it makes the classes more dynamic, whereas the doctor finds it helpful because it allows him or her to perform more complicated operations.

Ex 2

Example answer:

It's hard to say how teaching will change in the future. I'm sure that technology will play a more important part in designing learning pathways for students. I think they will be studying things which are more relevant to them personally. However, I think there'll still be a role for teachers because computers won't be able to motivate and encourage students in the same way. On the other hand, I think healthcare will change dramatically and more operations will be carried out by robots and computers. Again, I think doctors will still be needed to watch over the procedures, but robots will be expected to do more of the tasks which are difficult or risky for humans to carry out.

Of all the social problems the world faces, poverty could be considered the most significant. Recent statistics suggest that more than a billion people are currently living in serious poverty. Some people believe that the rich are the cause of the problem and that they continue to increase their wealth at the expense of the poor.

Income inequality is known to be increasing in many countries around the world. It has been said that in recent years, the richest one percent continued to increase their share of income, whilst the bottom half of the population continued to earn far less than the average income in their countries. Not only that, but there are huge differences between the incomes of the world's richest and poorest countries. One consequence of this inequality is that the poorest people have less access to education and healthcare and, as a result, are likely to remain trapped in poverty.

Nevertheless, extreme poverty has been in decline for a number of years. It is estimated that there are far fewer people living in extreme poverty than there were thirty years ago. However, this is largely due to advances in developing countries like China and India, rather than the richer countries sharing their wealth more equally.

In conclusion, some progress has been made towards helping large numbers of people get out of poverty. However, while they may not be living in extreme poverty, they are still living in relative poverty. If the rich continue to get richer, the poor will undoubtedly feel poorer.

Hi Suki,

My friend Yasmina gave me your email address and suggested getting in touch with you. She told me you've just moved to Scotland and that you're planning to spend a year here. So, welcome to Scotland! I'm sure you're going to have an amazing time here because it's such an interesting place. I'm not from Scotland, but I've lived in Glasgow for the last five years and I've loved every minute of it. The people are really friendly and the social life is amazing. (It can also be a bit tiring sometimes, especially at weekends when there's always something going on!)

Anyway, I know it can also be quite hard moving to a new country because things are probably quite different to what you're used to. I should know because I've lived in several different countries. Anyway, what I wanted to say is that you should let me know if you need help with anything. No matter what it is, I'd be delighted to help out. It would also be lovely if we could get together some time and I can show you around Glasgow. I'm sure you're really busy at the moment, but, when you get the chance, why don't you give me a call? If Glasgow's too far away for you, I'd be happy to come to you, wherever you might be staying.

What do you think? Reply here or message me on 00846 382479 and let me know.

Best wishes,
Andrea

SPEAKING
Ex 1
Example answer:
Both pictures show people communicating, but in different situations. In the first picture, there are four people who are gathered around a large table and it looks as though they're in a business meeting. The people are dressed in fairly formal clothes and there are laptops and glasses of water on the table. Two of the people are standing and they appear to be angry and frustrated. Meanwhile, the two people nearer the foreground seem a little calmer.
In contrast, the second picture shows a man and a woman who appear to be in a study or library. There are lots of books on the shelves and both of the people are holding open books. The woman is smiling and appears to be saying something to the man, who appears to be interested in what she has to say. They look relaxed and to be enjoying the peace and tranquillity.

Ex 2
Example answer:
In the first picture, the man and woman in the background are clearly upset. The way the man is pointing at the document suggests that the woman has done something wrong. Her open hands suggest that she doesn't think it was her fault. At the same time, the man in the foreground is signalling to the younger man to calm down by placing his hand on the man's arm. Meanwhile, in the second picture, the couple's body language is much more relaxed. The woman's crossed legs suggest that she feels comfortable in the man's company while the way he's turned his body towards her suggests he's interested in what she's saying.
