READING

3 Read four extracts in which people talk about sustainable lifestyles.

Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

0 Lola is satisfied that we have made good progress on changing our behaviour. _F_

1 Lola believes there are several advantages of switching to a plant-based diet. ___

2 Omar argues that large companies should not be blamed for environmental problems. ___

3 Omar believes that some corporations have intentionally hidden their activities from the public. ___

4 Petra feels that publicity about certain types of packaging hasn't changed much. ___

5 Petra believes that individuals should be making different choices about the products they buy. ___

6 Joseph thinks that human activity will always be a threat to the world around us. ___

A – LOLA

For me, sustainable living means taking personal responsibility for what is happening to the world around us and reducing the impact of our actions. We've been aware of the effects of human activity on the environment for decades, yet, in no way have we changed our behaviour enough. I'm particularly troubled by the overdependence on meat in the Western diet. Here in the UK, meat consumption has exploded despite the environmental damage the industry causes. When more land is dedicated to rearing animals, less land is available for forests and woodlands, which are essential for controlling climate change. The solution would be for more of us to switch to a vegetarian diet which is not only healthier but can also reduce greenhouse gas emissions significantly.

B – OMAR

It's great that the public are finally waking up to the threat of climate change, and I'm sure we'll overcome this problem. In my opinion, the biggest culprits are the multinational corporations. It's been business as usual for them, despite the environmental harm they're causing. Thanks to public pressure, corporations now want to look like they're doing something but I'm not convinced they're fully committed. Many use 'greenwashing', which is clever marketing, to make it appear as though they're environmentally friendly. Fortunately, people are beginning to see through them and increasingly expect genuine and meaningful changes. Nevertheless, the rate of change isn't fast enough. I'd like to see all companies taking their environmental impact more seriously. Regulations have helped to achieve this in some countries, but a set of global rules is the catalyst we need for real transformation.

C – PETRA

There's no doubt that individuals must do what they can to achieve a more sustainable lifestyle. However, unless businesses are also on board, our individual efforts won't be enough. For instance, single-use packaging is as common as ever, yet you would expect its use to have declined given the media coverage. I recall the glass milk bottles we used to have delivered to our houses. When the bottle was empty, the milk deliverer would return it the dairy to be recycled. Incredibly, these bottles were replaced by plastic cartons, of which only around a fifth are recycled. The problem is that, as an individual, the choice of products you can buy is limited. Manufacturers should make it easier for us to lead more sustainable lifestyles by finding alternatives to wasteful packaging.

D – JOSEPH

Personally speaking, I'm not sure that human existence is compatible with sustainability. For us to survive, consumption is necessary. One of the biggest threats to our existence is the continued use of fossil fuels, but no solution seems to be in sight. It's true that consumption has remained steady for some time, but it's far from sustainable. The problem is the lack of agreement about how to reduce our dependence on it at a global level despite attempts to set clear targets by international organisations. Developing nations point out that restricting use of fossil fuels limits their prospects of growth, asserting that global warming isn't their fault. While nations which have benefitted from fossil-fuel use are asking them to reduce their consumption. The problem of climate change can only be solved if all countries work together. That said, I'm pessimistic about our chances of being able to achieve it.

4 Read the extracts again. For questions (1–3), choose the correct speaker (A, B, C or D). The speakers may be chosen more than once.

Which speaker …

0 has a different opinion from Lola on whether the amount of resources humans use is increasing? _D_

1 takes the same view as Omar that environmental issues need to be dealt with internationally? ___

2 shares the same opinion as Petra about individuals needing to take responsibility for creating a more sustainable way of life? ___

3 has a different view to Joseph about our chances of effectively dealing with climate change? ___

WRITING

5 Complete the comment on a blog post. Circle the most appropriate options.

Some people are against loanwords but [0] what on earth's wrong / what is the problem with absorbing foreign words into your language? In fact, [1] one of the things / what I love about English is that [2] we've got / we have so many foreign words. Take 'schadenfreude', which [3] we've / has been borrowed from German. If I'm not wrong, it means 'to take pleasure from someone else's misfortune.' How else could you say that in English? It'd be [4] a right mouthful / really difficult to say!

___ / 4

6 Read the blog posts below. Write a comment responding to each one.

Tyler493
I can't stand vegetarians – they just want to make others feel guilty for eating meat. They're always going on about how it's bad for the environment or worrying about the poor little animals. It's what we've done for thousands of years and no one's complained about it before. TBH I'm not even sure it's healthy to be a vegetarian. Don't we need meat for a balanced diet?

Deranger6
I don't get why anyone would buy second-hand clothes. What annoys me is when people call it vintage fashion. Who are they trying to fool? Second-hand clothes are usually shabby. I'd rather spend my hard-earned cash on something decent. Anyone with any pride in themselves would do the same.

Write 100–130 words for each of your comments.
