1A GRAMMAR: describing past and present habits

Then and now

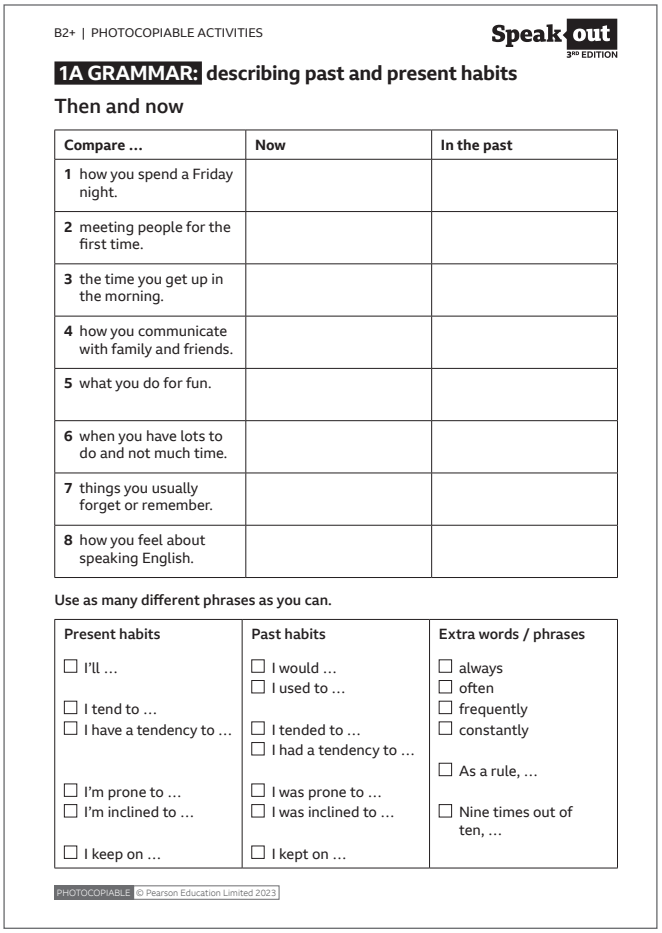

Materials: One worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do a class mingle. Give each student a worksheet and explain that for each of the prompts 1–8 they will be talking about and comparing habits now and in the past with each other. Give students a minute to read through the prompts. With a weaker class, give students extra time at this point to make brief notes under each prompt and look up any vocabulary they need. When they have finished, explain that students should discuss each prompt with a different member of the class. In their answers, they must include at least two of the prompts at the bottom of the worksheet. Students should tick the prompts as they use them to ensure they cover as many as possible. Explain that after the mingle you will be asking them for feedback on habits that were similar or different to a partner, so they should take notes to help them remember this if necessary.

Conduct the mingle. If students don't know each other, encourage them to introduce themselves each time they find a new partner. Circulate, assisting as necessary. You could also consider taking part in the activity to informally assess your students at this early stage of the course.

After the mingle, put students in pairs to briefly discuss their notes, using the target language in the third person, e.g. Lana tends to stay in and watch films on a Friday night, but I'll usually go out dancing. Elicit a few interesting comparisons students made in class feedback.

1A VOCABULARY: relationships; phrasal verbs: friendships

Friendship hiccups

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

Time: 15–20 minutes.

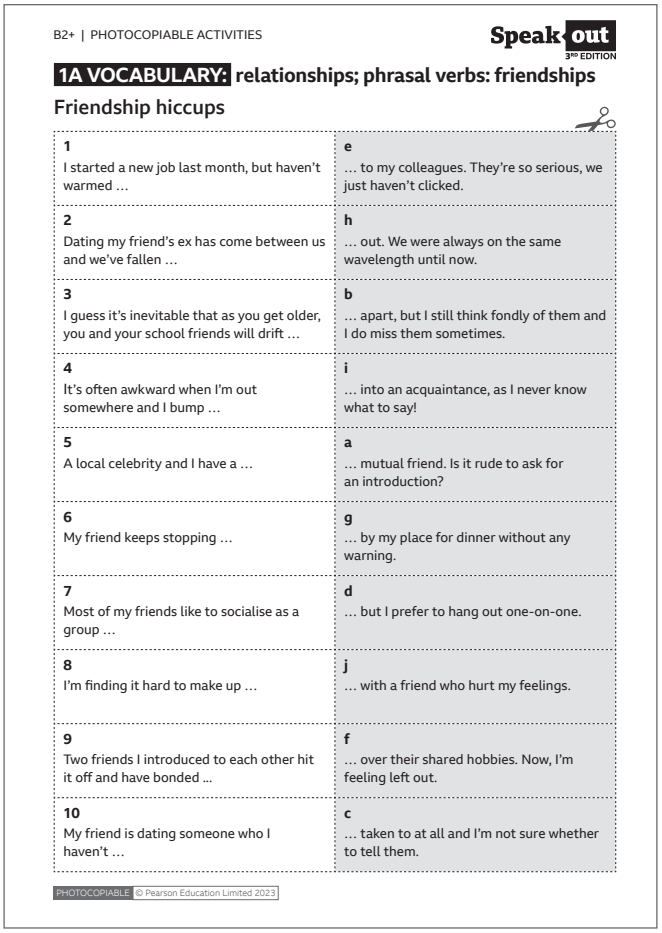

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise vocabulary for relationships and phrasal verbs related to friendship. Elicit (or demonstrate) the literal meaning of hiccups and explain that this word can also mean a problem or an issue. Explain that students are going to match sentence halves related to friendship hiccups. Put them in groups of three and give each group a set of cards. Students work together to match the cards to form sentences. Check answers as a class.

In their groups, students then discuss what advice they would give to the people in the situations. Finally, groups could decide on which was the easiest, most tricky and most common hiccup to solve and share these with the class.

To finish, ask students to share their choices, and if time allows, a possible piece of advice for each situation.

1B GRAMMAR: reduced relative clauses

Give me a clue

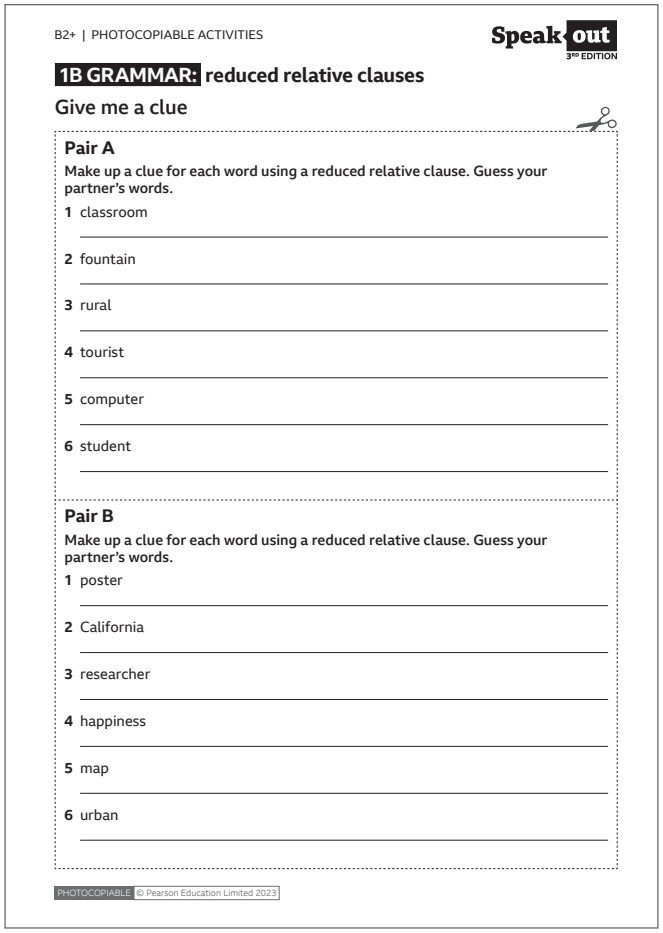

Materials: One half worksheet per pair

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise reduced relative clauses. Put students in pairs and give each pair a half worksheet, ensuring a balance of A/B sheets across the class. Ask pairs not to show each other their worksheets. Explain that they need to make up clues for the words on their sheet (taken from the Student's Book article on pages 11–12), using sentences with reduced relative clauses. Write two examples on the board from the first paragraph for students to guess e.g. This is a substance needed by everyone to survive. (water). This is a word meaning something is well-known or easy to recognise. (familiar). Elicit the reduced relative clauses in each one (underlined). Ask pairs to discuss (and write down if needed) their clues. Circulate, checking they are forming appropriate reduced relative clauses, then combine pairs with different worksheets to form groups of four. Students take turns to read out their clues for the other pair to guess, giving additional clues if necessary. Finish by eliciting a few clues from the class for others to guess.

As an optional extension, the listening pair could identify the reduced relative clause in the clue and say which words have been reduced in addition to guessing the word.

Fast finishers could write more clues for words of their choice, then share them with the class to guess.

1C HOW TO ... talk about hypothetical preferences

Who will ... ?

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to practise talking about hypothetical preferences. Preteach digger and meteor shower. Put students in groups of three and give each group a set of cards in a pile face down. Explain that there are various activities on the cards that they must divide between themselves (all the activities must be completed). To do this, they need to turn three cards face up to reveal the activities. The first student explains to the group which activities they would/wouldn't like to do, using the language for preferences, then chooses one activity card. Another card is then placed face up so that there are three for the next student to discuss and choose from, etc. This continues until all the cards have been taken. Circulate to monitor the activity, checking students are using a variety of the phrases from the Grammar Bank reference on page 112 correctly.

To finish, invite a few students to share one of their activities they 'are doing' and a sentence they used in the discussion.

For a longer activity, students could compare and discuss their 'activities' with a student from another group and decide whether they would like to swap any, again using the phrases from the lesson to react.

2A GRAMMAR: cleft sentences

Materials: One half worksheet per student

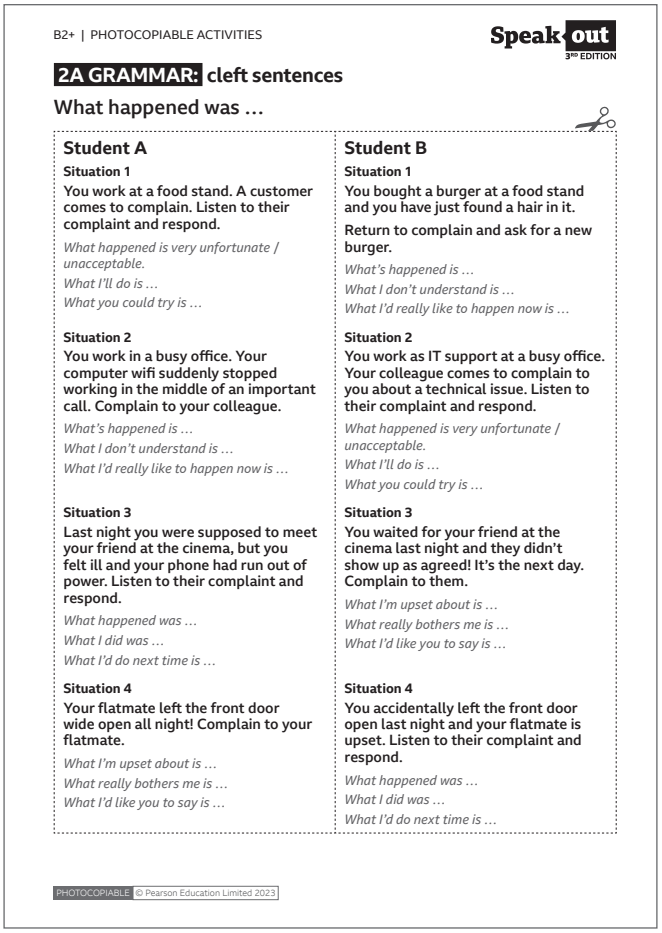

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to roleplay conversations to practise giving emphasis with cleft sentences. Explain that one situation where we use cleft sentences to emphasise is when things go wrong. Give each student a half worksheet, ensuring an even spread of A/B across the class. Give students a minute or two to read the situations. Point out that in each situation students should use at least two cleft sentences, using the prompts on the sheet or their own ideas.

Students work with someone with the same sheet to discuss what they could say for each situation. Circulate to assist and check sentences as required. Then put students in A/B pairs to roleplay the situations.

To finish, ask a few volunteers to roleplay a situation for the class, asking students to notice how they use cleft sentences.

For a longer activity, students could repeat the roleplays, either taking the other role or thinking of their own situation to roleplay.

2A VOCABULARY: idioms: winning and losing

Noughts and crosses

Materials: One worksheet per pair

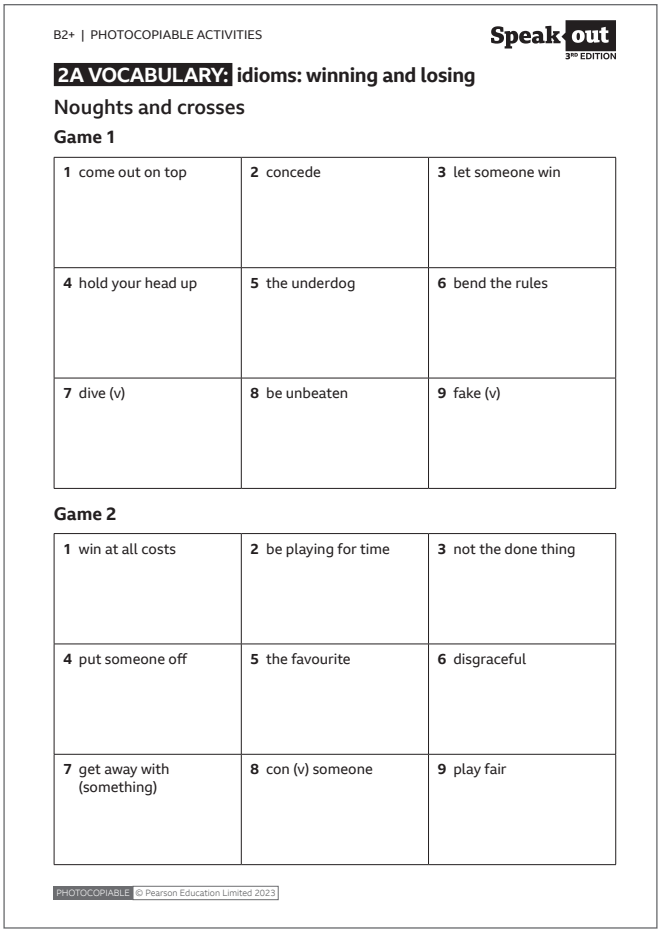

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game of noughts and crosses to practise idioms and vocabulary related to winning and losing. Put students in pairs. Give each pair a worksheet and assign one student noughts ('O') and the other crosses ('X'). Explain that they should take turns choosing a square, then make a sentence that includes the word or phrase in that square. Point out that the answer must make sense and be sufficiently detailed to demonstrate that they know the meaning of the word. If a student makes an appropriate sentence, they win the square and can write their symbol ('O' or 'X') in it. If their sentence is incorrect, they lose their turn. Circulate and monitor during the game, checking any sentences students are unsure of. The first player to win three squares in a row horizontally, vertically or diagonally wins the game.

When students have finished both games, they can make up sentences together for any of the unused squares.

In weaker classes, students could play as above, but in teams of two.

Alternatively, play the game as a team challenge. Put students in groups of three, then get them to work through the squares in order as quickly as possible (writing the answers) to see how many they can write sentences for. After ten minutes, check answers as a class. The team with the most correct answers wins.

2B GRAMMAR: ellipsis and substitution

Small talk

Materials: One worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise ellipsis and substitution. Give out a worksheet to each student and elicit the meaning of small talk (polite, friendly conversation about unimportant subjects). Explain that prompts 1–14 are small talk questions or comments which could be reduced in conversation using ellipsis. Give students a few minutes to cross out words which could be omitted in conversational spoken English, then check answers as a class.

Put students in pairs. Explain that students are going to take turns to start a short conversation using one of the sentences 1–14. Point out the prompts related to substitution and encourage students to include all of them in the activity, ticking them off as they use them, e.g.

A: Lovely weather. Hope it stays like this.

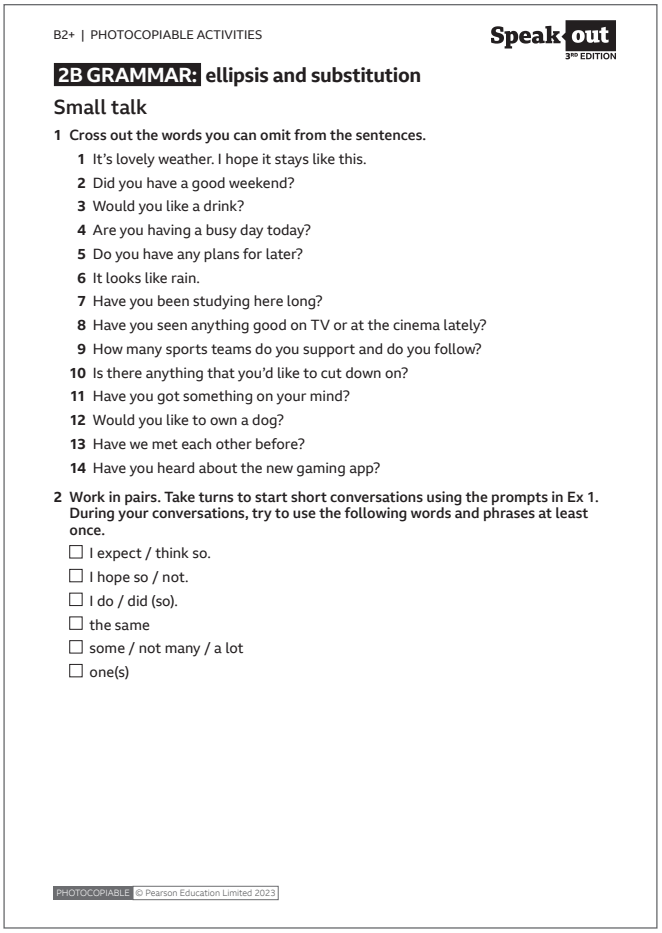

B: Yeah, (I) hope so.

To finish, invite a few pairs to share one of their conversations to demonstrate how they used substitution.

Alternatively, have a class mingle, where students start conversations with sentences 1–14 with different students.

ANSWERS (POSSIBLE REPLIES IN BRACKETS):

1 Lovely weather. Hope it stays like this. (Hope so!)
2 Good weekend? (Great one, thanks!)
3 Drink? (No thanks, I've had one.)
4 Busy day? (I think so. Lots to do after class. You?)
5 Any plans for later? (Staying in tonight. You?)
6 Looks like rain. (Hope not! I'm walking home.)
7 Been studying here long? (I've been here a couple of months. Started in June.)
8 Seen anything good lately? (Seen a couple of good ones. One was called …)
9 How many sports teams do you support and follow? (Not many! Although I follow some during the Olympics …)
10 Anything you'd like to cut down on? (Not a lot. Maybe coffee, though.)
11 Something on your mind? (Yes. Lots right now.)
12 Like to own a dog? (Already do!)
13 Have we met before? (I think so. Last week, at the park.)

2B VOCABULARY: industry competition

Connections

Materials: One worksheet per pair

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to discuss connections between phrases related to industry competition. Put students in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Students take turns to make sentences using two (or more) of the words and phrases in the ovals, e.g. Sometimes adversaries have healthy competition, but sometimes they become bitter rivals. / Cooperation on a minor project could later lead to forging a partnership. When they make a connection, they draw a line between the two ovals in the diagram. Point out that students can use the phrases more than once in their discussion.

Give students eight to ten minutes to make connections between the words and phrases. Then put two pairs together to compare and discuss their diagrams, making a note of any useful combinations of words and phrases. To finish, elicit some of the least connected words and phrases and work together as a class to make sentences with these words and phrases.

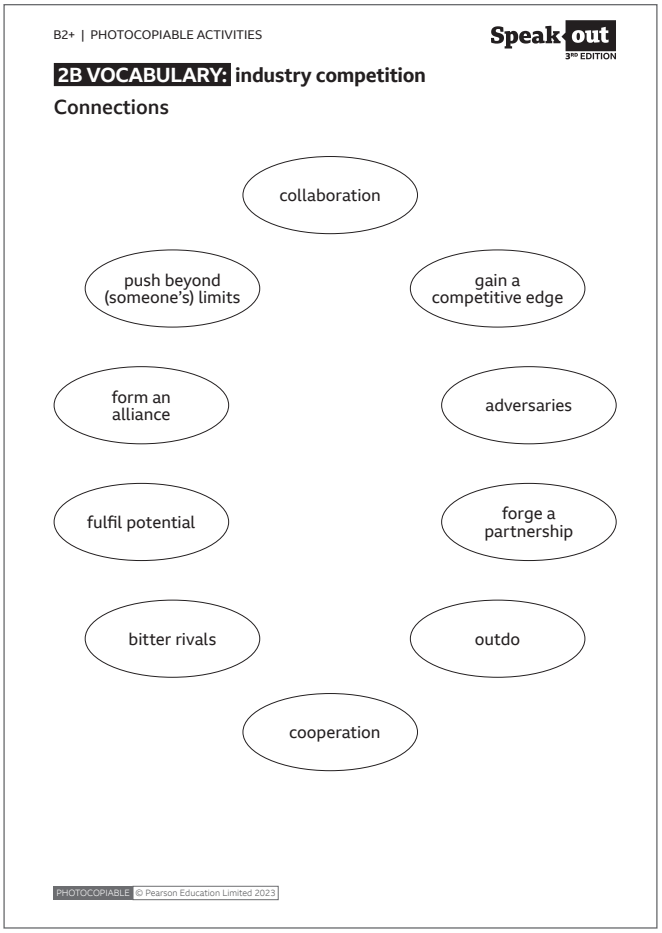

With stronger classes, you could challenge students to try and make connections starting with the second word/phrase used by their partner, e.g.

A: Bitter rivals try to outdo each other all the time.

B: But as they outdo each other, it actually helps them push beyond their limits.

A: To be pushed beyond my limits, I'd rather be motivated by cooperation with likeminded and supportive people.

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

Time: 20 minutes

In preparation for the activity, elicit what job satisfaction is (feeling content in your job), then brainstorm a few possible factors with the class on the board that might contribute to it. Tell students that they are going to practise comparing and evaluating ideas related to job satisfaction. Put them in groups of three and give each group a set of cards. Explain that groups need to compare and evaluate the factors on the cards, using the language from the lesson, e.g. I think a five percent pay rise is way more appealing than a nice view. Would you agree that having a good friend is slightly better than a good mentor?

Encourage them to discuss each factor in relation to the others, working together to rank them from most to least important. Circulate, monitoring their use of language for comparing and evaluating ideas.

Ask groups to compare and explain their choice to another group, using target language from the lesson.

In feedback, invite someone from each group to share the most and least important factors and comment briefly on their choice, using the target language from the lesson.

3A GRAMMAR: as if/as though

Materials: One card per student

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do a class mingle to practise as if/as though. Explain that they are at a fanfiction conference, and brainstorm what that might involve (e.g. talks by fanfiction authors, social events, writing workshops, etc.). Give them a minute to decide why they are at the conference, e.g. they're an author/journalist/fan, etc. Give each student a card and ask them not to show anyone. Explain that they are going to move around the classroom, making small talk about the conference. However, as they do this, they also need to follow the instructions on their card. Ask students to mingle and chat, demonstrating their target behaviour.

After a few minutes, students take turns to use as if/as though/like to guess what's on their partner's card, e.g. You seem as if you're in need of sleep. / You look as though you're hot. / It feels like you want to leave … until they guess the behaviour correctly. Circulate during the mingle, monitoring for accurate use of the target forms.

In feedback, elicit things different people were doing during the conversations using as if/as though in past forms, e.g. Farah looked like she was thirsty. With a stronger class, encourage exaggeration, which is common with these forms, e.g. Farah looked as if she was so thirsty she might pass out!

Alternatively, the activity can be done in pairs or groups. Give each pair or group a set of cards face down, which they distribute between themselves. Students take turns to act out (using mime, words or a combination) the instruction on one of their cards. The other student(s) watch and respond using as if/as though/like, e.g. You look as though you've lost something. / You seem as if you're uncomfortable., until they guess correctly. Finish with whole class feedback as above.

3A VOCABULARY: opinions and reactions

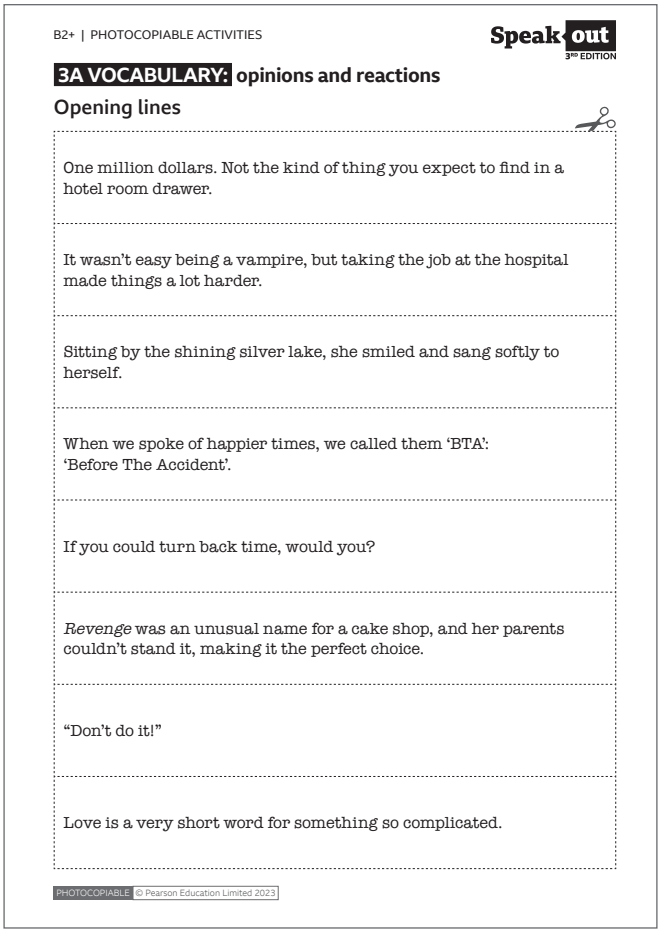

Opening lines

Materials: One worksheet per group of three, cut into cards

Time: 10–15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to practise vocabulary for opinions and reactions by discussing some made-up opening lines of novels. Ask students how important the first line of a novel is and whether they know any first lines. Elicit the vocabulary related to opinions and reactions from the Student's Book, and write it on the board for use as prompts during the activity (annoying, amusing, (not) believable, deep, far too much, keen, promising, rubbish, satisfying, terrible, upsetting). Put students in groups of three and give each group a set of opening lines face down. Encourage students to turn over the prompts one at a time, read the opening line aloud, then react to it, using the prompts from the board where relevant. Circulate during the discussion, assisting with language and ideas as needed.

To finish, invite each group to share how a word on the board related to one of the opening lines. Materials: One worksheet per pair

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise forming responses with no matter. Put students in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Explain to students that each shape includes a situation for them to respond to. Students will take turns choosing a shape and forming an appropriate response sentence with no matter. If they do this correctly, they 'win' the shape, marking it as theirs, e.g. with their initials or a coloured pen. To win the game, they need to make a complete line horizontally or vertically across the sheet, so they should choose their shapes carefully to try to block each other, where possible. Go through the examples on the sheet, pointing out that students should try to use as many different types of sentences with no matter in their responses as possible.

Students play the game. If they aren't sure their partner's answer is correct, they should check with you. If a student's answer is not grammatically correct or appropriate for the situation, their turn is over and they don't win the shape. Circulate, assisting as required, until all students have completed the game. Fast finishers should work together to think of responses for the remaining shapes. Finish by eliciting responses for a few of the shapes as a class.

3B VOCABULARY: idiomatic phrases: emotions

Mixed feelings

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

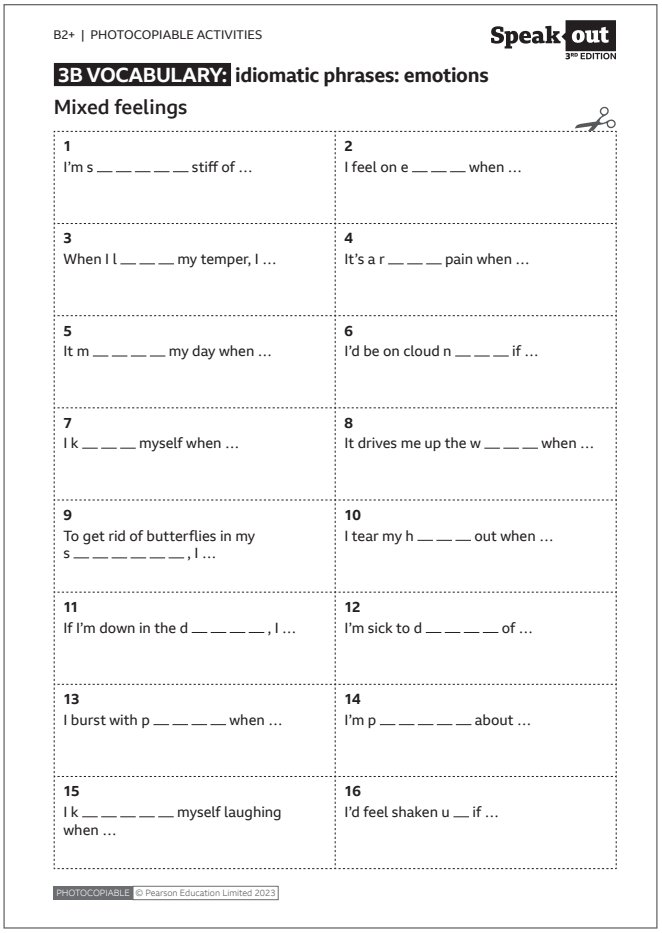

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to practise idiomatic phrases related to emotions from the Student's Book Lesson and Vocabulary Bank. Put students in groups of three and give each group a set of cards face down. Students take turns to pick up a card and complete the idiom verbally and then the sentence. If they can do so successfully, they keep the card. Monitor, checking any answers that students are unsure of. The student with the most cards at the end is the winner.

Alternatively, with a weaker class, students could work together to fill in the missing letters first. Check answers as a class, then ask groups to spread out the cards face up and take turns to choose a sentence to complete until they are all done. For a longer activity, each student could give an answer for all the cards.

3C HOW TO … engage with other people's views

Class trip

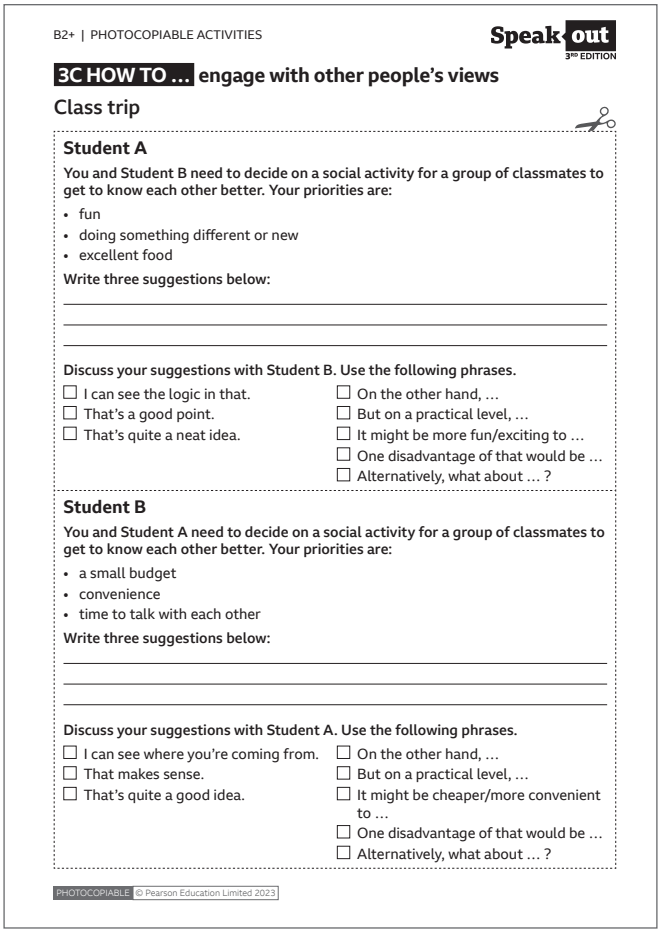

Materials: One half worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise engaging with other people's views. Give each student a half worksheet, ensuring an even spread of A and B across the class, and ask them not to show the sheets to each other. Explain that students are going to decide on a social activity for a group of classmates. Ask pairs of students with the same worksheet to work together for a few minutes to read their priorities and think of three possible activities. Emphasise that when they suggest the activities at the next stage, they will need to give reasons related to their priorities as listed on the sheet.

Reorganise students into A/B pairs for the discussion. Remind them to respond to an idea before countering it with one of their own and to discuss all six ideas before making a decision. Ask them to tick the phrases on their sheet as they use them to ensure a good spread of language. Circulate during the activity, monitoring to ensure students are responding to ideas before countering and are using a range of language.

To finish, invite one pair to share their decided location for a class trip, then another pair of students to respond and counter their idea. Repeat one or two times with the class.

4A GRAMMAR: uses of should

Shade the squares

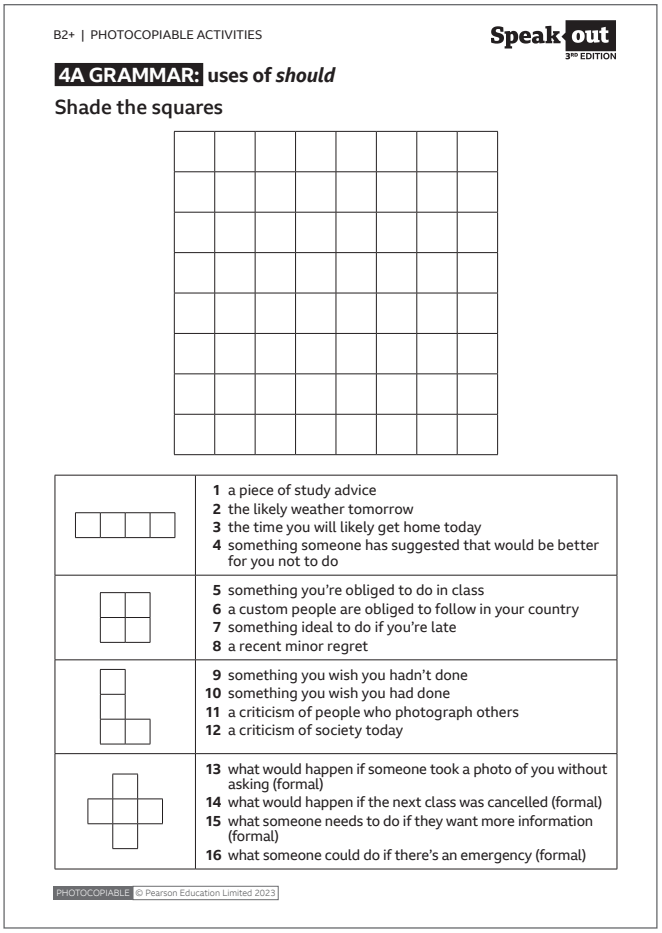

Materials: One worksheet per pair (plus a few extras), two different coloured pens or pencils for each pair

Time: 10–15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise uses of should. Put students in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Explain that each student in the pair needs a different coloured pen or pencil and that the goal of the game is to shade the most squares in their colour. Students take turns to choose any prompt on the sheet (1–16) and make a true sentence which must include should/shouldn't appropriately (checking with you if they are unsure). If their sentence is correct, the student colours their chosen squares on the grid in the pattern indicated for the category of the prompt, then crosses out the prompt so that it cannot be re-used. When no more shapes can be added to the grid, students count up the number of squares in their colour. The student with the most squares wins. Circulate during the activity, monitoring students' accuracy of should forms and checking answers as appropriate.

Fast finishers could think of sentences for any unused prompts, or play again with a new worksheet (making different sentences to the first time they played).

Finish by eliciting some example sentences for each prompt.

4A VOCABULARY: photography

Talk for a minute

Materials: One worksheet per group of three, cut into topic cards and prompt cards

Time: 10 minutes

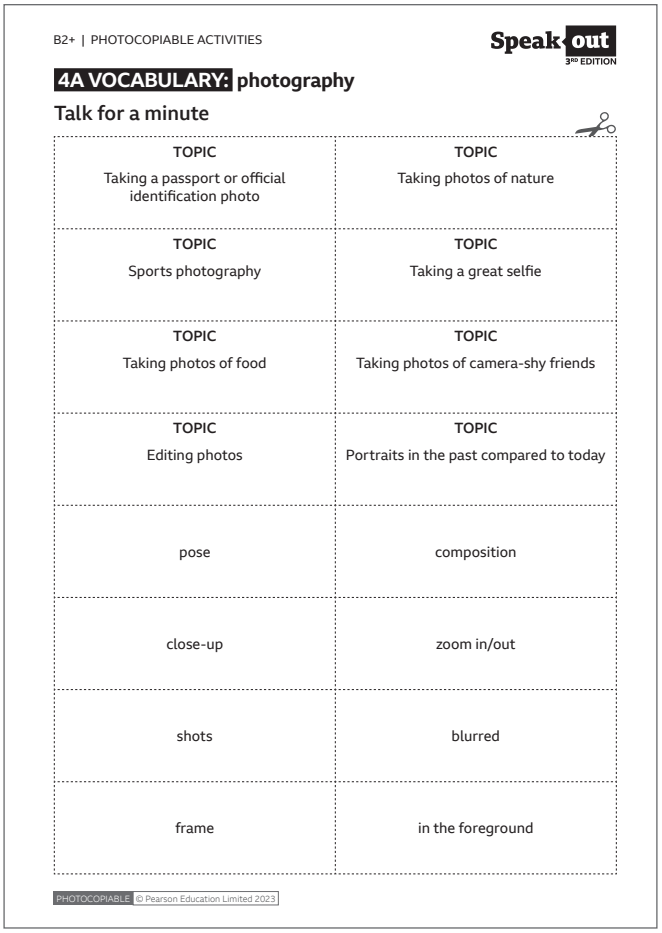

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise using vocabulary related to photography. Preteach camera-shy (someone who doesn't like having their photo taken).

Put students in groups of three and explain that they will take turns to talk for a minute each about different topics related to cameras or photography. Give each group a set of topic cards and a set of prompt cards (face up). Explain that they should spread out both sets of cards.

Students take turns to choose and talk about a topic, timing each other for one minute as they speak. Students have two turns each. The listeners listen for the use of the words on the prompt cards and turn them over as they are used. Each speaker should aim to use as many as possible during the minute. For a game version of the activity, students could get a point for each word they use, with the winner being the student getting the most points in any turn and/or trying to beat their own score on their second turn.

Alternatively, cut up the topic cards and give each group a set in a pile face down. Students take turns to pick up the top card. Without showing anyone, they immediately speak about the topic, using the target words as much as possible, while other students guess what they are talking about.

As an alternative activity, students could discuss the topics together with no time limit, aiming to use the prompts as much as possible.

4B GRAMMAR: the continuous aspect

Walk and talk

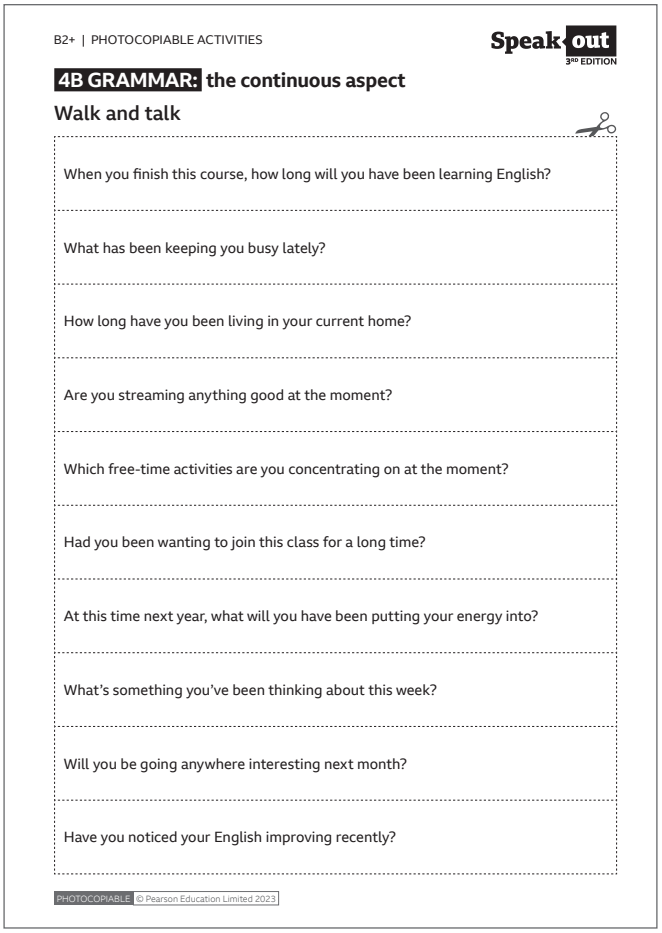

Materials: One worksheet cut into cards / One copy of the worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise the continuous aspect. Place the discussion cards around the classroom, taping or pinning them to the walls if possible, then put students in pairs. Explain that with their partner, they need to walk around the classroom, stopping at each card to discuss the question. They should focus on using the continuous aspect appropriately in their answers, as well as listening for them in their partner's answers (checking any answers they are unsure of with you). Depending on your class, you could either allow students to move freely between the cards, or use a bell or other sound to indicate they should rotate to the next discussion point. Monitor, providing feedback where appropriate. When students have finished, ask a few pairs to share something they discussed in class feedback.

If you have a weaker class, give each student a copy of the uncut worksheet. Allow them five minutes to read the questions and think about their answers before conducting a class mingle where they ask and answer each question with a different classmate.

Alternatively, if your classroom set up is not conducive to a mingle activity, distribute sets of cards and ask students to discuss the questions one by one in pairs/ small groups.

Elicit what kind of person might be an 'advertiser's dream' from students, and write their ideas on the board. Give each student a worksheet and explain that they need to read each statement and mark their answer on the continuum from Never to Always. Give students a few minutes to complete the questionnaire while you circulate, assisting as necessary. Then put students in small groups to compare and discuss their answers. Encourage them to give examples or reasons to back up their mark, e.g. I sometimes read flyers, but only if they're about products I'm interested in, like clothes or tech. Otherwise, I feel like it's a bit of a waste of time. How about you?

4C HOW TO … steer a conversation towards a topic

Lights, camera, interview

Materials: One half worksheet per student

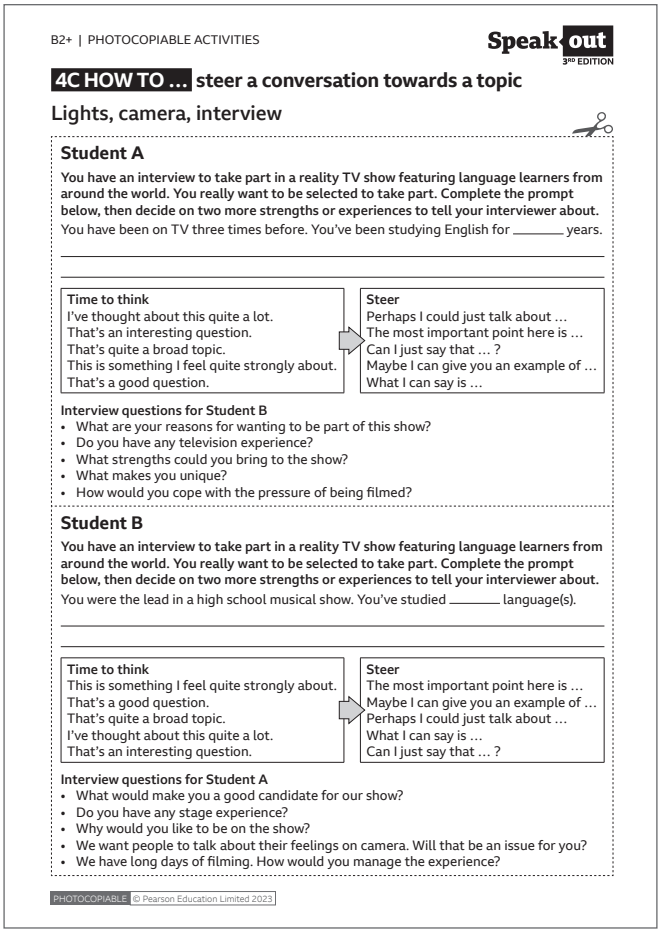

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to interview each other for an exciting reality TV show about language learners. Give some context that will appeal to your class, e.g. the learners will come from around the world to live on an island together and take part in challenges to win money for their favourite charity. Explain that they all really want to be a part of this show. Distribute half worksheets to students, ensuring an even spread of A/B roles across the class.

Read through the instructions with the students. Explain that the strengths and experiences they choose to talk about may be real or imagined, but that they should try and include points that would help them get a part on the TV show (you could put students with the same sheet together for a few minutes to brainstorm ideas if needed). Circulate, assisting as required.

When students have finished, point out the two boxes of prompts on the sheet for students to use. When replying to the interviewer's questions, they should use a prompt from the 'Time to think' box first before using a prompt from the 'Steer' box to steer the conversation towards their five key strengths or experiences during their interview. Put students in A/B pairs to take turns to interview each other, using the questions on the bottom of their sheets. Monitor the activity, noting examples of good steering which could be shared with the class.

To finish, ask a few volunteer pairs to ask and answer one of the interview questions for the class to demonstrate their steering abilities.

5A GRAMMAR: mixed conditionals

If I were different …

Materials: One worksheet per student

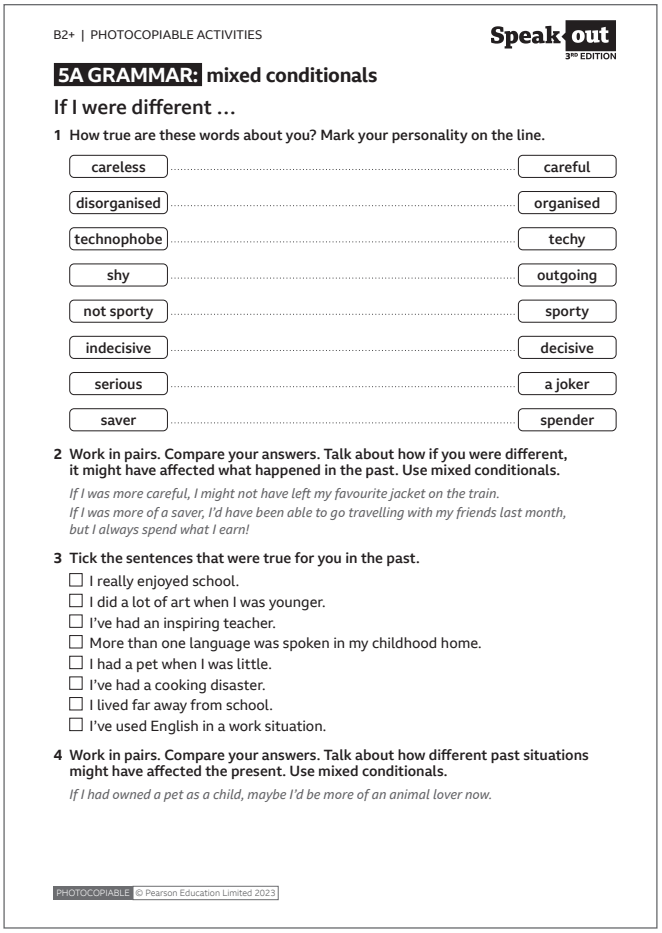

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise mixed conditionals. Give each student a worksheet and ask them to read the adjectives in Ex 1 and mark their responses along the lines. When they have finished, read through the instructions and examples to Ex 2, explaining that students need to use mixed conditionals to express how things would be different if their answer was something else. Remind them that mixed conditional structures relate to both the past and the present, so for the present statements about themselves they should reflect on past actions. Model the activity with a few examples, e.g. If I was sportier, I might have been a professional footballer instead of a teacher! Maybe if I was more decisive, I wouldn't have spent so much time choosing what to have for my lunch today. Circulate during the activity to monitor conditional forms and assist as required. For class feedback, invite students to share one of the mixed conditionals they or their partner shared.

For Ex 3, read through the statements as a class, inviting students to tick the ones that are true for them. Explain that this time, their mixed conditional will be based on past actions (or lack of action) and its effect on the present. Go through the examples on the sheet, and give some extra ones if useful, e.g. If I hadn't enjoyed school, I probably wouldn't be a teacher now! I might draw better now, if I'd done more art when I was younger.

For Ex 4, ask students to compare their answers. With a weaker class, students could be encouraged to choose four of the statements to reflect on and write down their conditional answers in pairs (for easier checking).

As an optional extension, students could think of other statements that are true of themselves in the present (or were in the past) then make up mixed conditionals about them if they were different.

careless	careful
disorganised	organised
technophobe	techy
shy	outgoing
not sporty	sporty
indecisive	decisive
serious	a joker
saver	spender

2 Work in pairs. Compare your answers. Talk about how if you were different, it might have affected what happened in the past. Use mixed conditionals.

If I was more careful, I might not have left my favourite jacket on the train.
If I was more of a saver, I'd have been able to go travelling with my friends last month, but I always spend what I earn!

3 Tick the sentences that were true for you in the past.

- ☐ I really enjoyed school.
- ☐ I did a lot of art when I was younger.
- ☐ I've had an inspiring teacher.
- ☐ More than one language was spoken in my childhood home.
- ☐ I had a pet when I was little.
- ☐ I've had a cooking disaster.
- ☐ I lived far away from school.
- ☐ I've used English in a work situation.

4 Work in pairs. Compare your answers. Talk about how different past situations might have affected the present. Use mixed conditionals.

5A VOCABULARY: decision and indecision

Making decisions

Materials: One worksheet per pair, cut into cards

Time: 10 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise phrases related to decision and indecision. Put students in pairs and give each pair a set of cards. Students spread the shuffled cards face down on the table, then take turns to turn over two cards. If they match to form a target phrase, they say a sentence using it and keep the cards. If the cards don't match, or the student cannot make a suitable sentence with their cards, they are turned face down again.

The student with the most pairs when all the cards have been used wins. Circulate during the game, checking sentences as needed. In weaker classes, the game could be played in groups of three, or with two pairs forming teams.

Alternatively, instead of pelmanism, pairs or groups could work together to match the phrases, then take turns to choose one and form a question for the other student(s) to answer, using the target phrase, e.g.

A: Do you usually spend much time assessing all possible outcomes before you make a decision?

B: Well, it depends, if …

The student who answers then chooses the next phrase to make a question, etc.

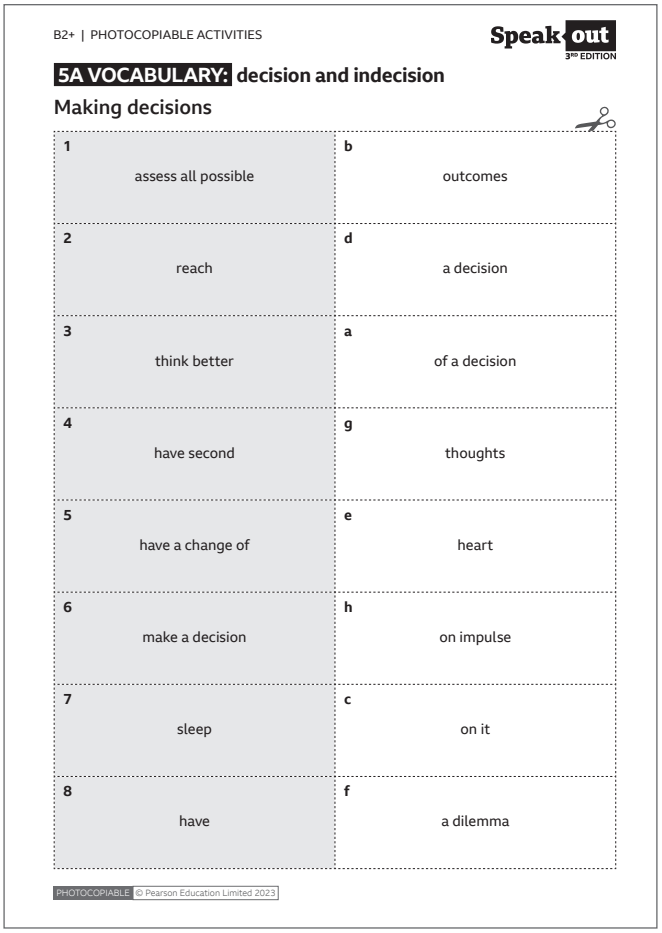

As an optional follow-up, students put cards a–h aside and place cards 1–8 face down in a pile. In groups of three, students take turns to draw a card and read it aloud. The other students have to call out the missing word(s) to complete the phrase, e.g.

A: have a change of

B: heart

The student who calls out the missing word(s) correctly first keeps the card, otherwise, it is placed on the bottom of the pile and the game continues. The student with the most cards at the end of the game wins.

Materials: One card per student

Time: 20 minutes

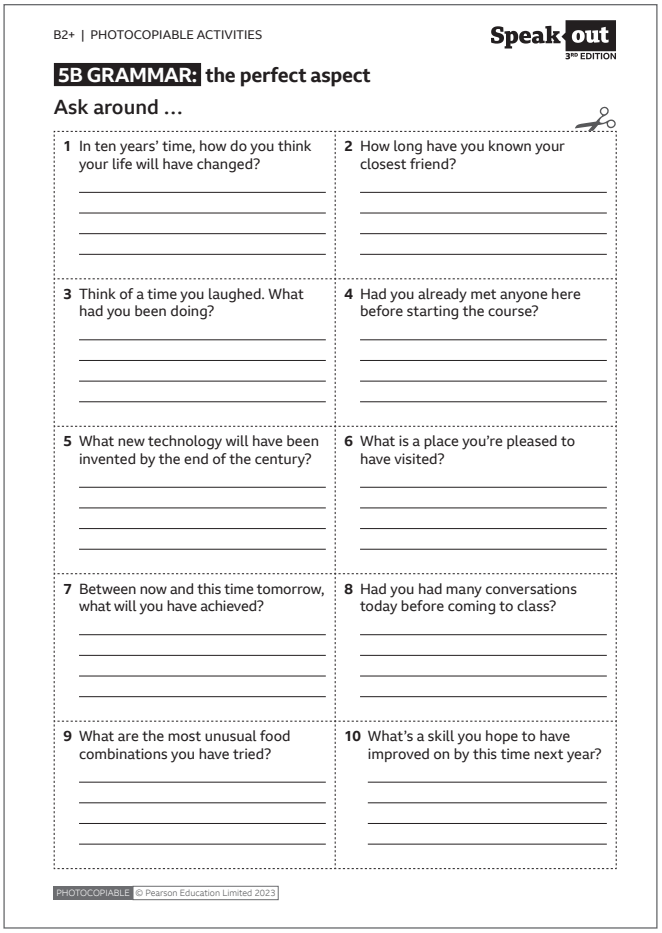

Tell students that they are going to do a class mingle to practise the perfect aspect. Elicit or teach the phrase ask around (ask different people a question to get a range of views and opinions) and give each student a question card. If there are duplicate cards, students can be grouped with others who have the same card. Ask students to identify the perfect form in their question, then check forms as a class. Explain that students are going to 'ask around' the class, gathering and noting down each other's answers in order to report back afterwards.

Conduct the mingle, encouraging students to 'ask around' as much as possible, taking brief notes on their card about each person they talk to. You could set a timer, e.g. for ten minutes, on the board so they know how much time they have. Encourage them to use the perfect aspect appropriately in their answers and to extend themselves by giving and asking for reasons and extra details where possible.

To finish, go around the class, asking each student or group to report back what they found out. Students with duplicate cards could compare answers together before presenting what they found out.

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they're going to do a team quiz to practise vocabulary related to the natural world. Put students in teams of two to four. Give each team a worksheet face down and explain that they need to both complete the question with the best word and discuss and answer as many questions as possible using their general knowledge (or their best guess). Give teams a time limit, e.g. ten minutes, to complete the quiz. Groups then swap sheets with another team and mark each other's quizzes as you call out the answers. Remind the class that the highest score for the quiz is 20 points. Students should award one point for a correctly completed question and another point for the correct answer.

As an optional extension, teams could each research and write two more questions for the class to answer about the natural world, using at least two of the target words from the lesson.

5C HOW TO … summarise

Money for a good cause

Materials: One half worksheet per pair

Time: 20–25 minutes

Tell students that they are going to have a discussion to practise summarising. Check students' understanding of fundraising (to raise money for a good cause), auction (a selling process, where an item is sold to the person who offers the most money) and donation (something, often money, that you give to a person or organisation to help them). As a class, brainstorm some ideas about fundraising campaigns students have participated in or seen. Write the ideas on the board in two groups:

1 the focus of the campaigns, e.g. an issue, a community group or a school, etc.
2 the methods used to fundraise, e.g. fun runs, sponsored challenges, sales, etc.

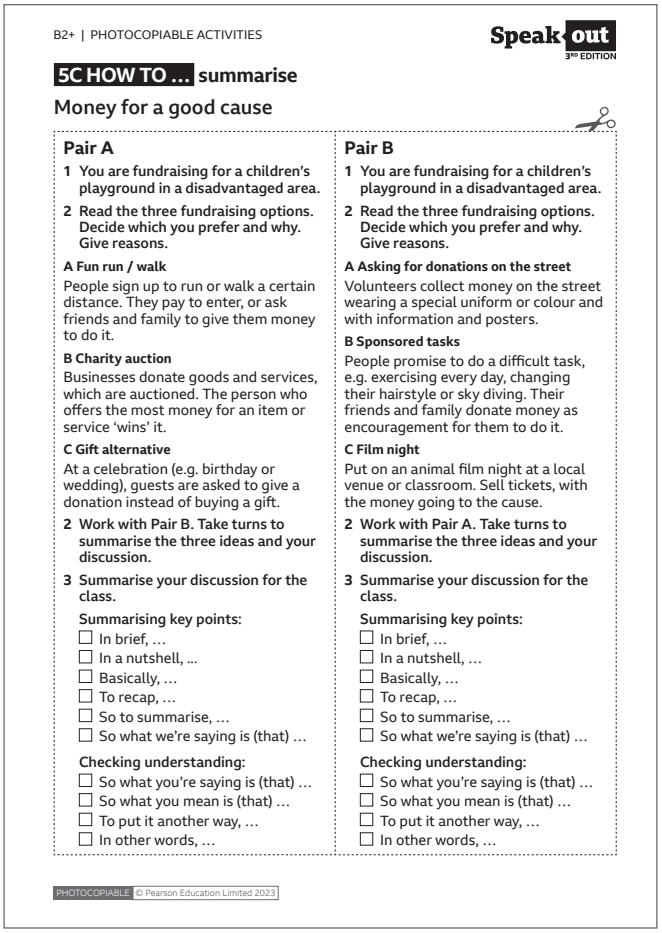

Explain that students are going to discuss and evaluate a series of ideas for fundraising for a children's playground in a disadvantaged area, using language for summarising at different stages.

Put students in pairs and give each pair a half worksheet, ensuring an even spread of A/B sheets across the class. Explain that students need to discuss the three fundraising ideas on their sheet, giving opinions and taking turns to use phrases to check each other's understanding. Point out the prompts on the sheet.

After about five minutes of discussion, combine an A pair and B pair to form groups of four. Pairs then take turns to summarise the three ideas they discussed and what they thought of them, while the pair who are listening uses the target phrases to check their understanding. When they have finished, the group discusses and evaluates the six ideas together, then decides on the best one.

To finish, ask one student from each group of four to give a brief summary of which ideas they liked most / least, again using the phrases to summarise.

Alternatively, instead of the children's playground, students could discuss another social or environmental cause or issue, relevant to your context and their interests, e.g. animal rescue centre, community garden, homeless shelter, etc.

5C HOW TO … summarise

Money for a good cause

Pair A

1 You are fundraising for a children's playground in a disadvantaged area.

2 Read the three fundraising options. Decide which you prefer and why. Give reasons.

A Fun run / walk
People sign up to run or walk a certain distance. They pay to enter, or ask friends and family to give them money to do it.

B Charity auction
Businesses donate goods and services, which are auctioned. The person who offers the most money for an item or service 'wins' it.

C Gift alternative
At a celebration (e.g. birthday or wedding), guests are asked to give a donation instead of buying a gift.

2 Work with Pair B. Take turns to summarise the three ideas and your discussion.

3 Summarise your discussion for the class.

Pair B

1 You are fundraising for a children's playground in a disadvantaged area.

2 Read the three fundraising options. Decide which you prefer and why. Give reasons.

A Asking for donations on the street
Volunteers collect money on the street wearing a special uniform or colour and with information and posters.

B Sponsored tasks
People promise to do a difficult task, e.g. exercising every day, changing their hairstyle or sky diving. Their friends and family donate money as encouragement for them to do it.

C Film night
Put on an animal film night at a local venue or classroom. Sell tickets, with the money going to the cause.

2 Work with Pair A. Take turns to summarise the three ideas and your discussion.

6A GRAMMAR: inversion

Trust me!

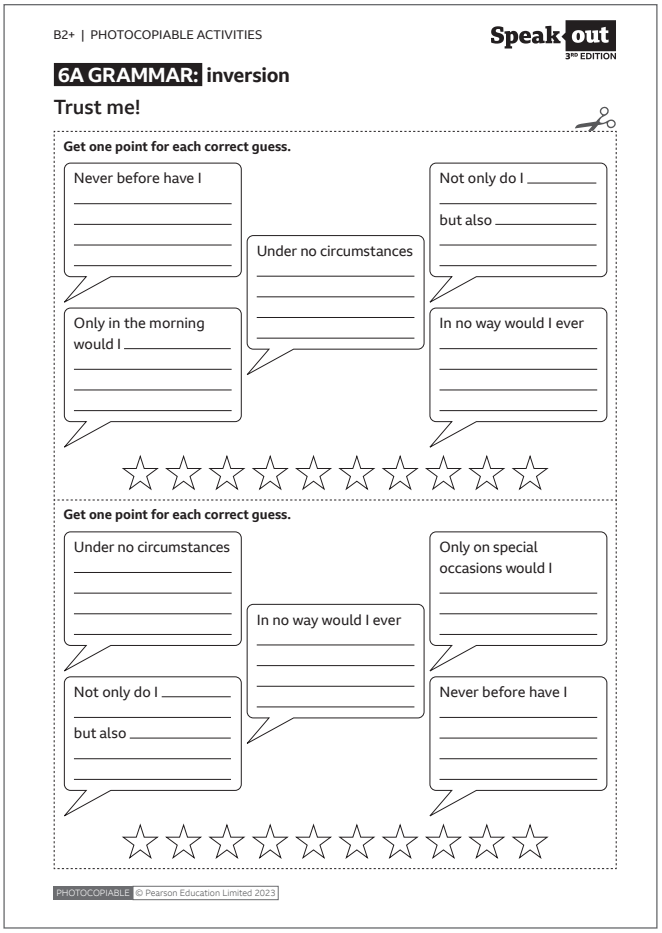

Materials: One card per student

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they're going to play a mingle game to practice inversion. Explain that students are going to share inverted sentences about themselves, some true and some false, and that other students will guess whether the sentences are true or not. Model the activity by giving a few sample prompts and asking students to guess if they're true or false, e.g. Never before have I performed karaoke. / Under no circumstances would I ever get a large dog. / In no way would I ever deliberately lose a game.

Give each student a card and allow them time to write sentences using the prompts. Emphasise that at least one statement on the card should be false. Circulate as students write, checking forms of inversion as required. With a stronger class, students could think about what to say without writing down their sentences in advance.

Point out the stars on each card and explain that each time students guess correctly whether another student's sentence is true or not, they get one point / star. Circulate during the mingle, monitoring for accurate use of inversion and noting any good examples students could share during feedback. The first student to get ten points wins the game. At that point, invite a few students to share one of their sentences in class feedback and ask the rest of the class to guess if it's true or not.

6A VOCABULARY: algorithms

Human calculations

Materials: One worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise the vocabulary related to algorithms. Give each student a worksheet and explain that they should write answers to any eight of the prompts in the shapes on their worksheet, but out of order. Note that they should write only the word or phrase, and not the whole sentence. Circulate while students complete their shapes individually, assisting as required.

Demonstrate the next stage on the board by modelling with one of your own answers to a prompt. For example, write the phrase spices in an shape on the board. Ask students to guess which prompt it refers to and how, emphasising that they should use passives in their guesses e.g.

Student: Do spices take ages to process?

Teacher: They might, but it's not what I was going for.

Student: Do you like to categorise spices at home?

Teacher: Yes, I always categorise them because …

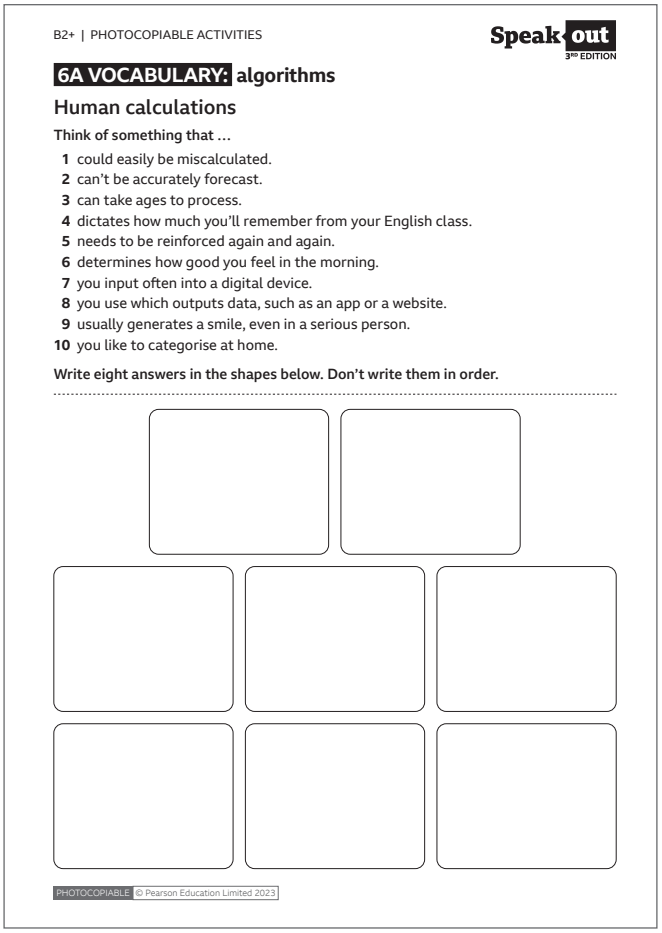

Put students in pairs. Ask them to tear along the dotted line and swap worksheets, then take turns to guess which prompt each phrase in the shapes refers to. When they have guessed correctly, they make a note of their partner's answer next to the sentences on the top part of their sheet and ask follow-up questions to continue the conversation.

When pairs have finished, ask a few students to share a sentence about their partner with the class.

Alternatively, instead of guessing after swapping sheets, students can take turns to ask about their partner's prompts, and answer using the target vocabulary from the prompt e.g.

A: Why did you write 'a cute baby'?

B: Well, a cute baby can generate a smile, even in a room of serious people. I remember once …

6B GRAMMAR: passive structures

Say more …

Materials: One worksheet per student

Time: 15 minutes

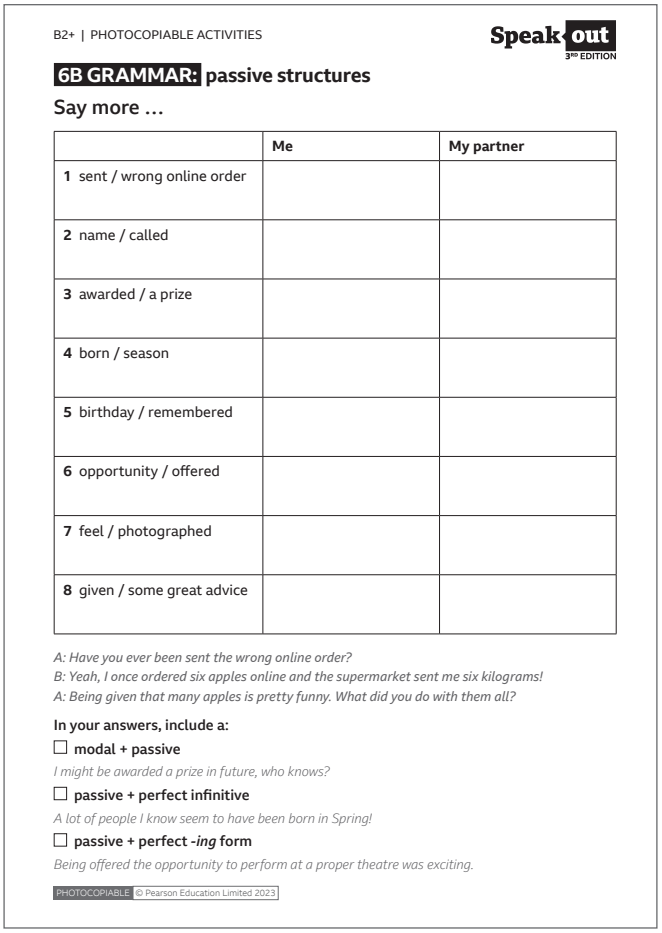

Tell students that they are going to have a discussion to practise passive structures. Put students in pairs and give each student a worksheet. Explain that students need to take turns to make passive questions for each other using the prompts, with their partner answering and then asking a follow-up question. Read through the example at the bottom of the worksheet and encourage students to use a range of different passive structures in their discussion, ticking off the three structures on the sheet as they use them.

With a weaker class, write questions collaboratively as a class on the board (or in a document), ensuring they are grammatically correct, including a passive structure in the examples. Point out that students should take some brief notes about their answers and their partner's answers in the grid on the sheet. Circulate as students ask and answer the questions, checking passive forms are correct and encouraging students to use a range of forms. To finish, elicit a few passive questions and responses for each item from each pair.

For a longer activity, students could swap partners and report some of the most interesting experiences from their first discussion, using their notes.

POSSIBLE QUESTIONS:

1. Have you ever been sent the wrong online order? What would you do if you were sent the wrong online order?
2. Is there a name you would prefer to be called?
3. Have you ever been awarded a prize? If you were awarded a prize, what would it be for?
4. What season were you born in?
5. Is it important to you for your birthday to be remembered?

6B VOCABULARY: talking about mistakes; phrases with right and wrong

I was sure nothing would go wrong!

Materials: One card per student

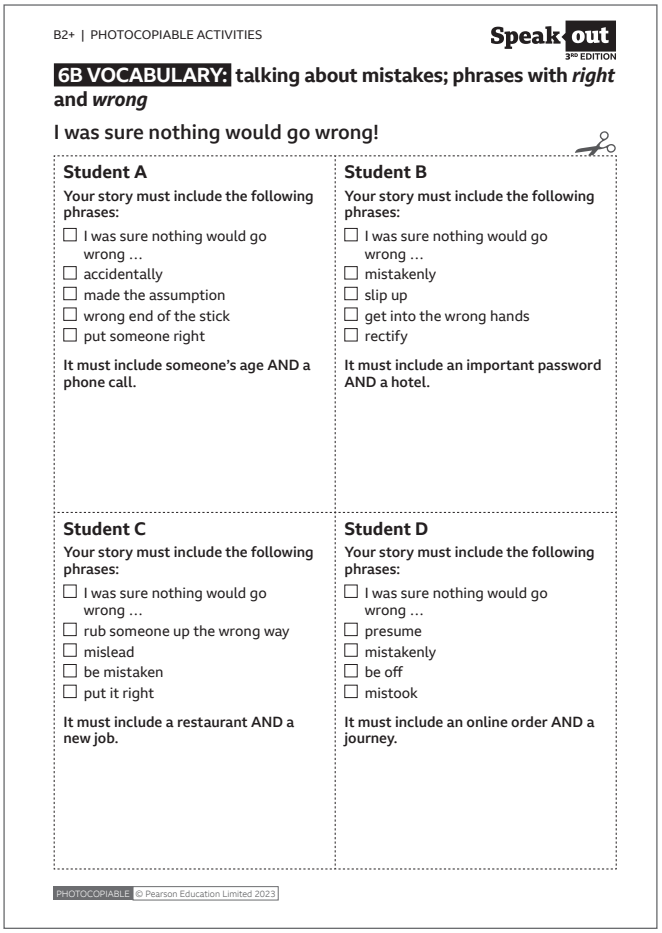

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise vocabulary for mistakes and phrases with right and wrong. Explain that students are going to make up stories about mistakes drawing on their experiences, those of people they know, and their imagination. Give each student a card, ensuring an even spread of A–D cards among the class. For the first stage, ask students to work with someone with the same card. Give pairs a time limit, e.g. ten minutes, to come up with an anecdote about a mistake that includes all the words and phrases on their cards – the more outrageous the better! Point out that students can use the space below the phrases on the cards to make notes. Explain that both students in the pair need to be able to retell the anecdote independently. Circulate, assisting with language and ideas as needed.

When they have finished, put students in groups of four (cards A–D) to tell their anecdotes. Tell students that they all have five phrases and two pieces of information to include. They all have the same first phrase, but the other four phrases and the two pieces of information are different on each card. As each student tells their anecdote, the other students in the group should listen for the phrases related to mistakes the speaker uses and check they are used correctly. When the anecdote is finished, the listeners should guess what the two pieces of information the speaker had to include were.

If time is short, students could work in pairs to retell their anecdotes rather than groups of four.

To finish, each group could nominate the most outrageous story from their group to be told to the class. As an optional extra, ask the class to vote for the most outrageous story.

Materials: One worksheet per pair, cut in half

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do some roleplays to practise language for negotiating in a dispute. Put students in pairs and give each pair an A/B worksheet. Demonstrate with a volunteer student how to use the flow chart as a guide for the roleplay, incorporating phrases at the bottom of the sheet where appropriate. Circulate while students do their roleplays, monitoring the language for negotiating in a dispute. To finish, ask a couple of pairs to act out one of their negotiations for the class.

Alternatively, ask Student Bs to rotate after each negotiation so students roleplay with a different student each time. You could use a bell or similar to signal it's time to move.

7A GRAMMAR: adverbials

Speed sentences

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise adverbials. Put students in groups of three and ask each group to choose a broad topic for their sentences they will make in the game, e.g. study, food, film, football, pets, travel, etc. When groups have nominated their topic, give them a set of cards. Explain that students will take turns to pick up a card and make a correct sentence using the adverbial on it. The meaning must make sense and the adverbial must be correctly placed to be 'correct'. Demonstrate the game, e.g. if the theme is 'study' and the card is 'extremely', the sentence might be: It's extremely hard to remember everything the first time you hear it, so taking notes is important. The first group to make correct sentences with all the adverbials wins. Circulate during the game, checking sentences as needed.

Alternatively, place the adverbials for each group in piles on a desk at the front of the classroom. A student from each group comes forward to collect the first adverbial and takes it back to their group who writes a sentence with it. The student then takes the sentence to the teacher to check. If it is correct, the group can take the next adverbial from the pile, and so on. The first group to work through their pile is the winner and shares their sentences with the class.

Materials: One worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they're going to have a class mingle to practise vocabulary for explaining meaning. Give each student a worksheet and allow two minutes for them to read the questions and consider their answers. Encourage students to incorporate the target verbs for explaining meaning in their answers, e.g. Well, I sometimes need to spell out for people that I need some alone time! / Here's a picture of my family at the beach. It really captures how much fun we have together! Students then mingle around the classroom, asking and answering the questions with different students and writing their name and notes relating to their answer on the sheet.

Circulate during the activity, monitoring for appropriate use of the verbs to explain meaning. After students have found an answer to all their questions, they sit down, then discuss some of their answers in pairs. Finish by eliciting a few things students found out from the class.

Tell students that they're going to do an activity to practise fronting. Give each student a worksheet and explain that they need to write four questions about a topic of their choice, e.g. food, hobbies, goals, music, work, etc. in the boxes. Point out that the questions should be about the past, the present, the future, and something hypothetical, as indicated. In weaker classes, students could do this stage in pairs. Circulate, helping with any queries and assisting with ideas and language as required. When students have finished writing their questions, put them in groups of three to ask and answer their questions. Explain that as all the questions end in why, they need to front each answer with a reason, cause or explanation. Give some examples, e.g.

A: What was your favourite food as a child and why?

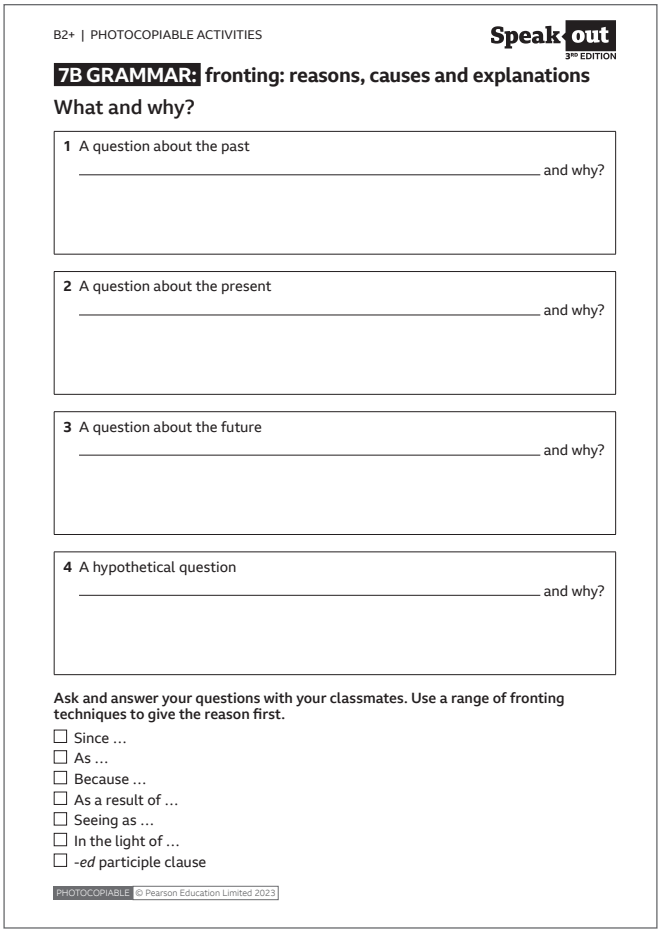

B: Since I've always loved sweet things, it's no surprise that my answer is chocolate ice cream!

A: How do you get to English class and why?

Encourage students to use different phrases to front their answers, ticking them off on their worksheet as they go. Circulate and monitor for accurate use of fronting phrases in the discussions.

Guess and combine

Materials: One worksheet per group of four, cut into cards

Time: 15 minutes

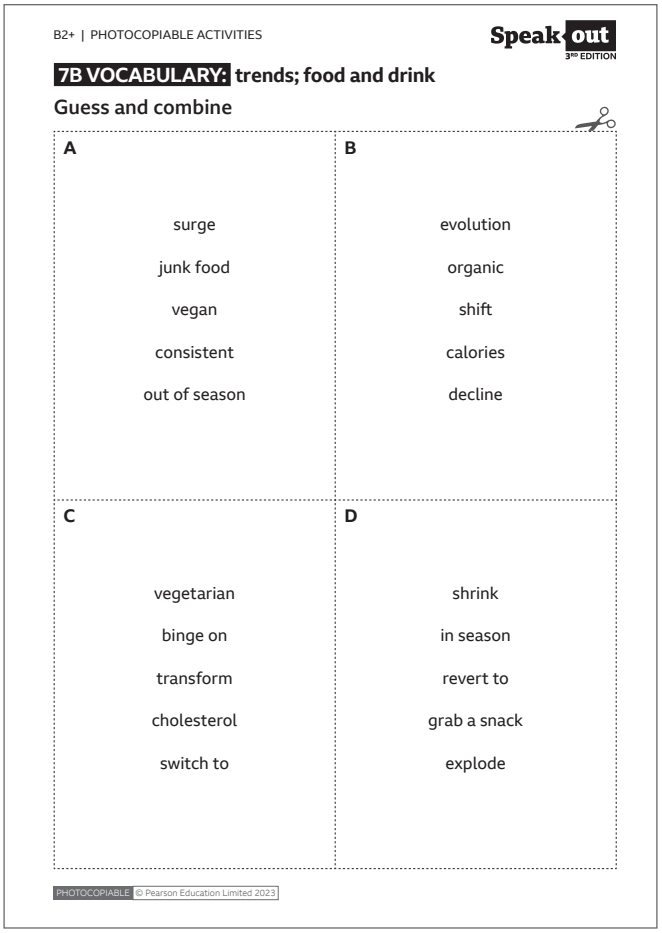

Tell students that they're going to play a game called 'guess and combine' to practise vocabulary for trends and food and drink. Demonstrate the game by explaining the following words for students to guess without mentioning the target words (diet, catalyst, remain steady, nutrients). As students guess correctly, write the words on the board, then ask them to combine at least two of the words to make a sentence, e.g. Learning more about climate change can be a catalyst for people to change their diet. Put students in groups of four and give each group a set of cards face down. Explain that students will each take one card (A–D) with five words/phrases on it. Without showing each other their cards, they need to explain those words for their group members to guess without saying the target word.

With weaker classes, give students time to plan the clues for the words before they explain them to their classmates to guess. With stronger classes, students could take the cards and begin explaining with no planning.

Once students have guessed all the words on a given card, the group works together to combine at least two of the words to make a sentence.

To finish, invite each group to share one of their combined sentences with the class.

Alternatively, if students enjoy competitive games, they could get a point each time they are the first to correctly guess a word on someone else's list. The student with the most points at the end is the winner.

Materials: One set of cards per pair

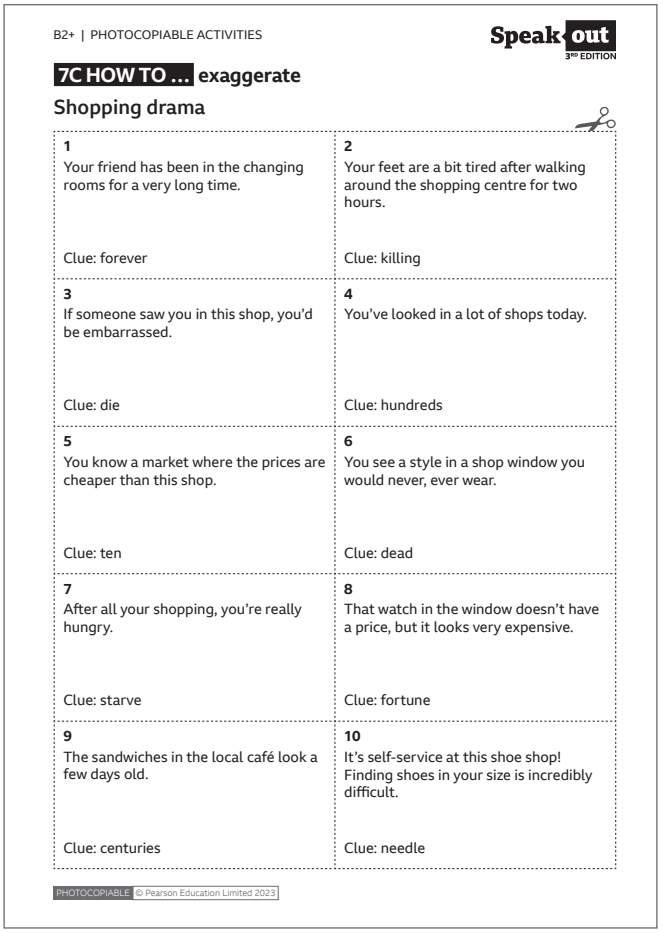

Time: 10-20 minutes

Tell students that they're going to do an activity to practise exaggerating. Explain that students need to imagine they're on a shopping trip and elicit some exaggerations they might say in this scenario. Put them in pairs and give each pair a set of cards face down. Explain and demonstrate that students should take turns to take a card from the pile and read the phrase to their partner, who must think of what they could say in the situation using an exaggeration. If they're not sure, the reader gives the clue at the bottom of the card to help their partner. If students can exaggerate correctly using the clue word, they keep the card. If not, it goes to the bottom of the pile. Circulate to monitor and assist during the activity as required, then check answers to all the cards as a class.

As an optional follow-up, students could roleplay a moment from a shopping expedition, using at least three of the exaggeration expressions from the cards.

POSSIBLE ANSWERS:

8A GRAMMAR: concession

Argument tennis

Materials: One worksheet per pair

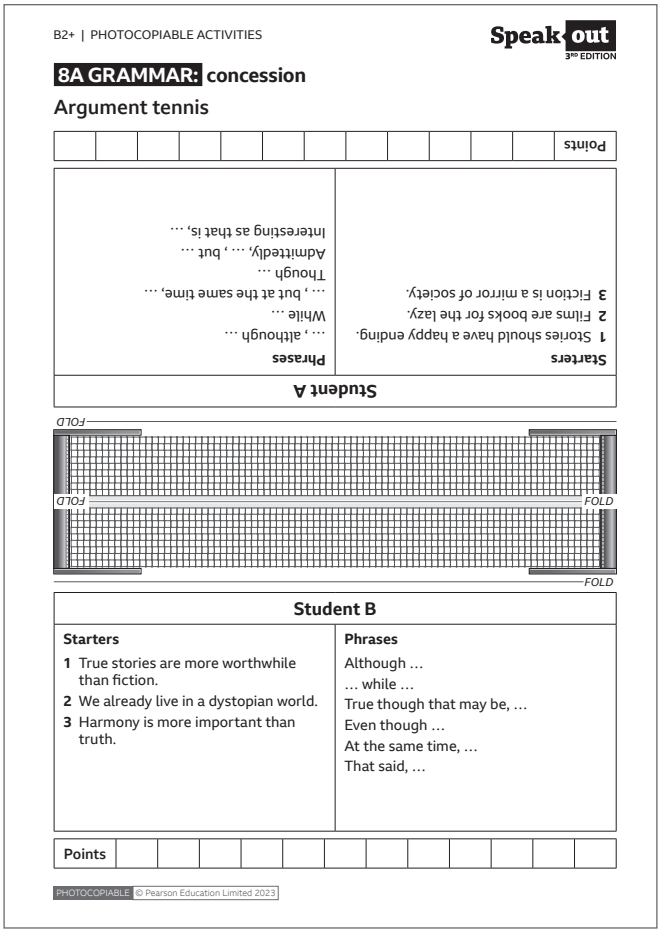

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they're going to play a game to practise concession. Ask students what they know about playing tennis and point out that keeping an argument going is like playing tennis, with one person saying something, or 'serving' and the other person then 'returning' the argument with a concession phrase and counter point.

Put students in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Explain that they should fold the sheet along the lines indicated to form a tennis net between the two sides. Tell students that they will take turns to 'serve' by starting a conversation using one of the starters on their sheet. The other person 'returns' by replying within five seconds, including one of the phrases on their sheet to make a concession and counter point. Students continue to reply, or 'return' the conversation to each other as many times as they can. Whoever is the last person to say something wins a point and records this on their sheet in the points table. The other student then begins the next conversation by 'serving' a new starter. Circulate as students play the game, assisting as necessary. After three serves each, the student with the most points on their sheet wins.

With a weaker class, the time to reply could be increased, or students could play in pairs, taking turns to be the responder. For a longer activity, or for fast finishers, students could swap ends of the net and play again with some of their own starters.

Alternatively, pairs work together to create an ongoing argument, making one point for every turn in the conversation until someone hesitates. Then the next player 'serves' a new topic and they try to beat their own score.

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise the vocabulary for talking about dystopian and utopian societies. Elicit what 'word association' is, i.e. thinking of words that you connect with another word. Explain that you have a word in mind and you will give them three clues one at a time (e.g. novel, story, imagined). Students need to guess your mystery word by making and explaining possible connections, e.g.

Teacher: My associated words are novel, story and imagined.

Student: A novel is a kind of book. Is the word 'book'?

Teacher: No. Try again.

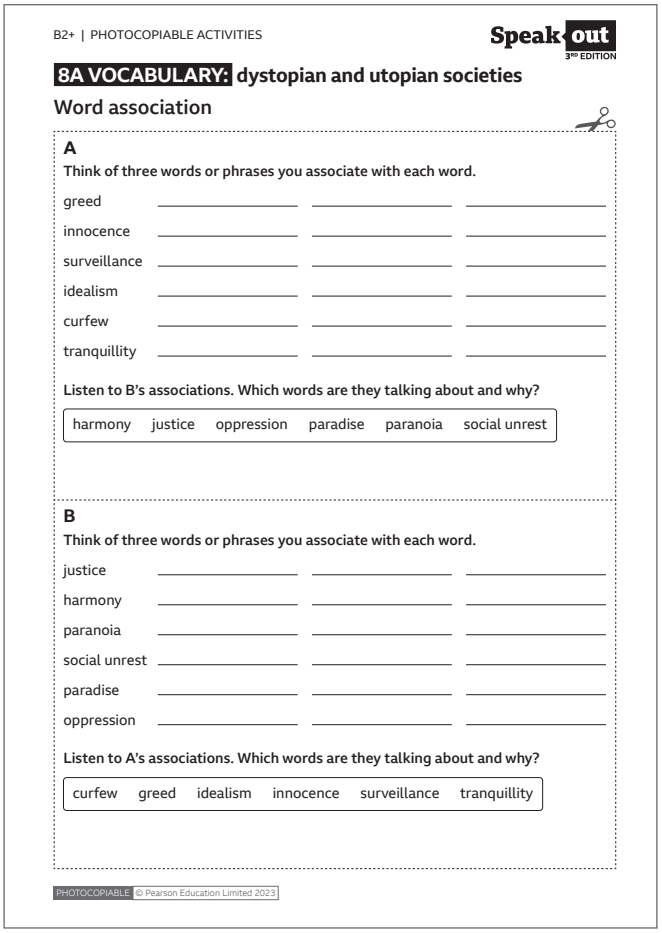

Student: An imagined story or novel is fiction. Is the word 'fiction'?

Teacher: Yes!

Give each student a half worksheet ensuring an even spread of A/B across the class. Ask students to work with someone with the same sheet and brainstorm three words they associate with each word on their sheet. (Both students need to write down their ideas as a reference for the next stage, although it doesn't matter if the words are not identical to their partner's.) Circulate and assist as required.

When students have finished, reorganise them into A/B pairs. Students take turns to say their three word associations (without saying the target word) while their partner listens and guesses which word it is from the six listed at the bottom of their sheet. In their guess, they need to include an explanation of why they think it's that word by connecting the associations, e.g. I think it's … because … / The word relates to the word … because … .

To finish, ask a few students to share their associations for one of the words and say why they chose them.

8B GRAMMAR: future forms

Ladders

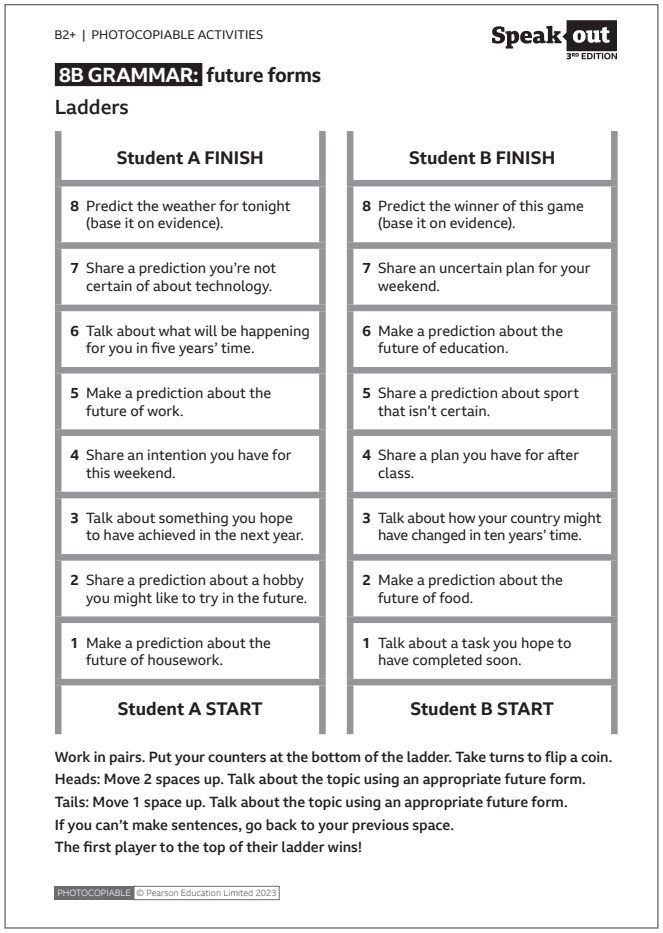

Materials: One worksheet per pair, two counters and one coin per pair

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise using future forms. Put them in pairs and give each pair a worksheet and a coin. Check students understand that heads is one side of a coin (usually with a head on it) and tails is the other side.

Go through the instructions on the sheet and demonstrate the game. Each A/B student puts their counter on their start space and Student A flips the coin. If it lands on tails, they move one space up the ladder and if it lands on heads, they move two spaces. When they move to a new square, they must make a correct sentence about the topic on it using an appropriate future form. If they can't, then they go back to their previous space (or START, in the case of their first turn). The first student to reach the FINISH at the top of the ladder wins. Circulate as students play the game, monitoring and assisting with language as required. If time allows, students could swap A/B roles and play again.

To finish, elicit some of the sentences students made about the topics on the game board, establishing which future forms they used and why.

POSSIBLE ANSWERS:

A

1 In future, robots will become much more widely used to do chores.
2 I might try making jewellery, as I'd like to do something creative.
3 By this time next year, I'll have graduated!
4 I'm going to play tennis with a friend.
5 In future, people will generally work fewer hours, but it will be harder to find a job.
6 In five years' time, I'll be living in my own place.
7 In future, computer screens could be different shapes, like ovals or circles, etc. Why not?
8 It's definitely going to be hot. It's been hot every night for the last month!

B

1 Very soon, I'll have finished sorting out my plans for next year!
2 In future, it's likely that people will reduce their consumption of animal products.
3 In ten years' time, we'll have more trade agreements with other countries.
4 After class, I'm going to head to the library.
5 My country could host the Olympics in the next fifty years. Who knows?
6 In future, schools will focus more on students' well-being.
7 My friends and I may meet up for a meal, we're not sure yet.
8 I'm going to win, I'm four squares ahead!

8B VOCABULARY: science and technology

Invent a product

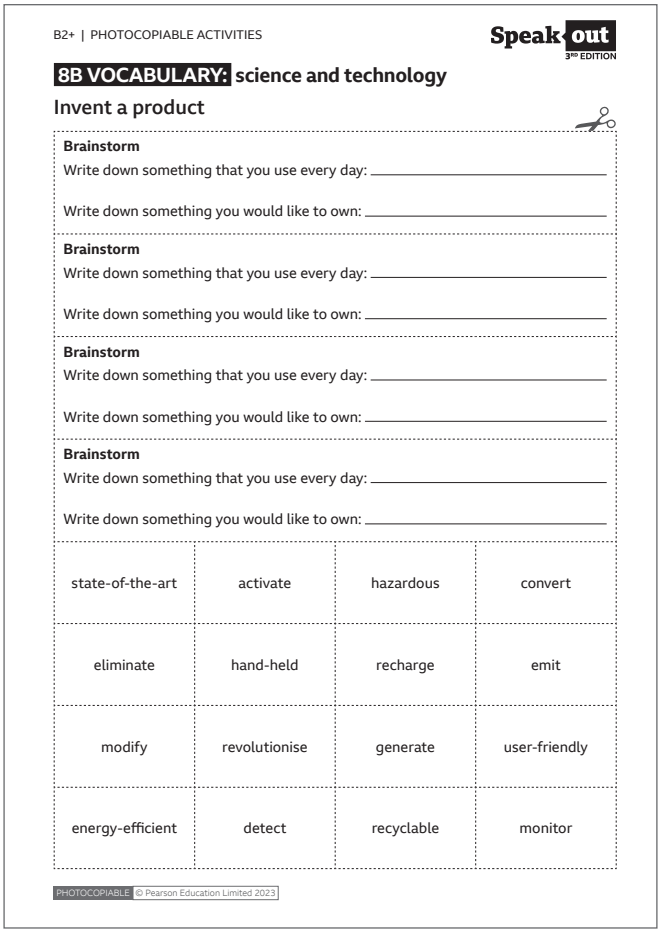

Materials: One 'Brainstorm' card and four word cards per group

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise vocabulary for science and technology. Put students in groups of two or three and give each group a 'Brainstorm' card. Give them a minute to quickly write down something in each category, then collect the cards back in. Explain that each group is now going to work together to make up a useful (or possibly ridiculous) invention. Give each group a different Brainstorm card to the one they wrote, along with four word cards. Explain that they have ten minutes to invent a product that combines both items on the card. Students then prepare a 30-second to one-minute pitch on their product for the class that includes the four word cards, explaining what it is and what its benefits are.

In their groups, students discuss their inventions and write their pitches (they could look at the advertisements in Ex 1C on page 95 of the Student's Book for inspiration). Monitor and assist as necessary. If your class is very big, one group could pitch to a few groups at the same time, who then select one pitch to go forward to a class pitch.

After each group has pitched its invention, students vote for the best one.

8C HOW TO … maintain and end a discussion

Work the room

Materials: One worksheet per student

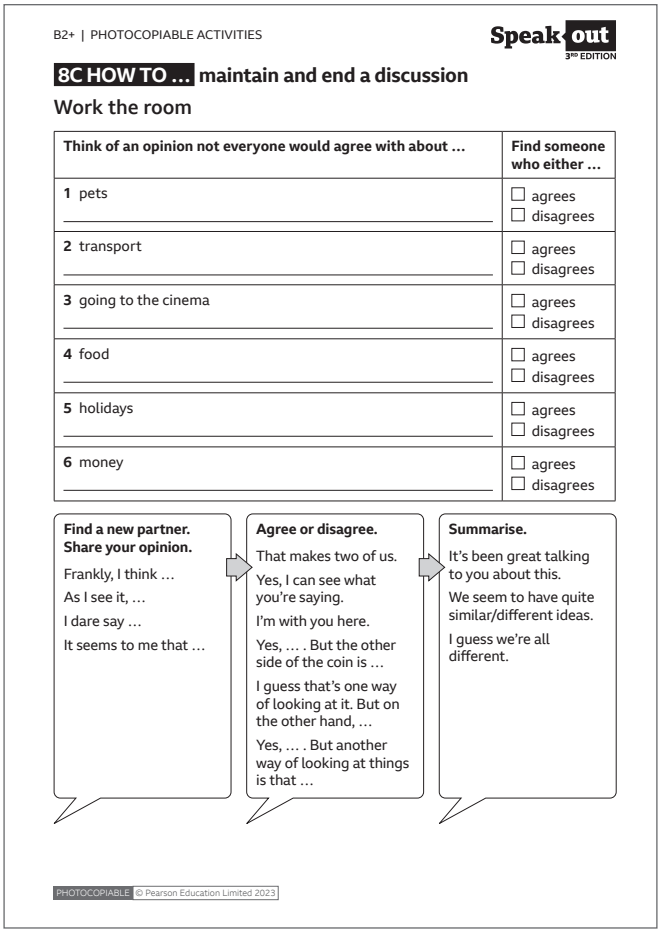

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do a class mingle to practice maintaining and ending discussions. Introduce the phrase to work a room and elicit or explain that it means to go around a room networking, or deliberately speaking to lots of different people at a social or business occasion. Explain that students are now going to 'work the room', discussing their opinions on various topics. Give each student a worksheet and give them a few minutes to think and note down an opinion for items 1–6. They can use their real opinions, or choose to make up or exaggerate opinions for the sake of the activity. Point out that they should try to come up with something that their classmates will be divided on, but not be offended by, e.g. A dog is the best pet. / Public transport should be free.

When students have finished, go through the staging and prompts at the bottom of the sheet. Explain that when students pair up, one shares an opinion, the other responds. Then the first student summarises, and then they swap roles. Highlight that the conversation will probably go back and forth a few times, but emphasise that each exchange needs to end with one of the summary phrases.

Following the discussion, the student who shared the opinion ticks whether they found someone who agreed or disagreed in the relevant column. Students could also tick the prompt phrases they use to ensure good coverage.

When students have had six conversations as the opinion sharer and six as the responder, they sit back down. Finish by inviting a few volunteers to share an opinion for the class to respond to, using the target phrases.
