2 So what you're saying …
3 In a nutshell, …
4 To put it another way …
5 In brief, …
6 So to summarise, …

POSSIBLE ANSWERS:

1 So what you're saying is that you want celebrities to mention social issues as it'll help to get the press interested, but not so much that it becomes more important than the art.
2 In a nutshell, climate change protests are beginning to annoy people, which means they don't achieve the impact the protestors want.
3 In other words, doing silly things to raise awareness of an issue is a waste of time.
4 To put it another way, there are so many social issues that people feel overwhelmed by them, but that doesn't mean we should give up trying to deal with them.

Pronunciation: intonation when summarising

6A

So, / in a nutshell, / to get people to change their habits / you first need to raise their awareness of the problem. / To do this, / you can organise a petition, / a debate, / a concert / or a social media campaign.

The speaker's voice goes down before each pause.

6C

POSSIBLE ANSWER:

So, / in a nutshell, / over 10,000 signatures were collected on a petition, / but they weren't all valid / and not everyone understood what they were signing. Basically, / it didn't have much of an impact.

6 Use opportunities to try new foods, however unusual, to learn about a culture rather than make fun of it. Try to buy meals or recipe books from people of the minority culture so they are the ones who benefit.

POSSIBLE ANSWER:

The globalisation of food is the result of improvements in transport technology and the reduction of trade barriers between countries. It allows us to eat food from around the world and in most cases results in increased economic development for countries. Since food trade isn't new and migrants have introduced foods to different cultures for centuries, there are many examples of foods that are now global. Pizza is a classic example of a food which is essentially the same around the world with some changes according to local tastes, e.g. toppings such as squid and tandoori chicken. However, globalisation has its downsides. It has resulted in an increased consumption of fast food and it has a negative impact on the environment. There are also examples where a dominant culture in society has benefitted financially from food from a

Unit 8 the future

BBC Vlogs

Most of the people are optimistic about the future.

Reasons mentioned:

Speaker 1: pessimistic; tends to worry about what could go wrong

Speaker 2: optimistic; believes science and technology can solve our problems

Speaker 3: optimistic; believes that people are innately good and challenges can be overcome; believes there's lots to enjoy in life

Speaker 4: pessimistic; believes we have not learnt from history and are not moving on

Speaker 5: optimistic; thinks technological developments will provide solutions to many problems; has a lot of confidence in younger generations and their ability to deal with any future issues

Speaker 6: optimistic; excited to see what happens in their career, their life, all the people they are going to meet and places they are going to go. But admits it's easy to feel pessimistic about the future because of the climate crisis.

8A Dystopias and utopias

Reading

1C

dystopia: a society which is dominated by fear, where people are isolated and paranoid utopia: a society where friendship and social bonds are maximised

Ss may add that a dystopia is an imaginary place, often in the future, where life is extremely difficult and that it is often dominated by an authoritarian state.

2C

POSSIBLE ANSWERS:

1 It's dirty and polluted and perhaps shabby and not well looked after.

2 It's unpleasant – he's isolated from others, watched by humans and computers and there's no joy at home.

3 These happened previously, possibly when citizens protested about the lack of justice from the Volters or the way they are governed by the Volters. But there haven't been any protests in recent months.

4 He looks back on it positively, maybe seeing it more positively than it really was.

5 They are machines with AI and were created by humans.

6 Machines with AI were created to make money. They developed greater intelligence than humans and now they control humans.

7 If brain implants are put into people's heads, the Volters will be able to read people's thoughts and may punish people for negative thoughts about them and their society.
