Careers advice

Four professionals offer advice for people starting new careers.

A: GABI – brand manager

Before moving into my current role, I worked in graphic design. However, having had the chance to work on various branding projects, I was desperate to get involved in brand management. Since I hadn't studied business or marketing like most brand managers, I had to prove myself by taking on new tasks at every opportunity. In my opinion, you should always be prepared to go out of your comfort zone as it helps you expand your range of skills and experience. Another piece of advice for anyone thinking of going into brand management is not to worry about what others think about you. Just do your best. It doesn't matter if you make mistakes. The truth is that our mistakes can teach us a great deal.

B: MOHAMED – photographer

Some people think that being a photographer means working alone. The reality, though, is that photography is often a collaborative effort. Whether you're working with other professionals, like models and stylists, or with your clients, you need to be on the same wavelength as them. Another thing that's worth bearing in mind is that photography can be all-consuming. In general, we're taught about the importance of maintaining a healthy work–life balance. However, if you want to be successful, photography has to be your life. It's not like a 9–5 job because you never know when you'll get the chance for that perfect shot. That's why you're unlikely to ever find a professional photographer without a camera.

C: NATALIA – architect

Having graduated from university with a degree in architecture, I thought finding a job would be a piece of cake. However, I didn't realise how competitive the sector is and was beginning to have second thoughts. I stuck with it though and managed to find a job. I'm happy to learn new skills, but at my own pace. If you're constantly being asked to do new things, it can become overwhelming. So, you should always place clear limits about what you're prepared to do. In my case, there was so much pressure to take on tasks I hadn't been trained for that it pushed me to my limits. Remember to keep your career in perspective. It's only one part of your life and you shouldn't forget the things that really give your life meaning, like your family and friends.

D: JAIME – mathematician

I work as a mathematician for an insurance company and spend my time analysing data and trying to forecast the likelihood of future events. In the past, I would have used a pen and paper, but nowadays we use Machine Learning (ML) algorithms. You might think it's a solitary job, but it's absolutely essential to be a team player as you have to work with different departments. It's not an easy job and though university provides you with knowledge of the subject, it doesn't give you the practical skills. The only way to acquire them is on the job. Things are bound to go wrong sometimes. In fact, just after starting, I miscalculated one of my forecasts and made a costly error. I was kicking myself at the time, but I've since learnt to embrace failure and treat it as an opportunity for learning. That's the most useful piece of advice I could give anyone starting a new career.

2 Mohamed advises against close relationships with colleagues. ___

3 Mohamed thinks photographers should avoid restricting their working day to fixed times. ___

4 Natalia almost changed her mind about pursuing a career in architecture. ___

5 Jaime finds it easier to work with traditional tools rather than complicated computer instructions. ___

6 Jaime has never regretted making a mistake with one of his predictions. ___
