READING

3 Read an interview with the manager of a cooperative farm. Match the headings (1–4) with the paragraphs (A–E).

0 In what ways can a cooperative guarantee the commitment of its workers? _C_

1 According to your website, the farm was established more than 200 years ago. Has it been a cooperative all that time? ___

2 You mentioned training and have a web page dedicated to education. How important is training and education to your business model? ___

3 How can a business like Appletree Farm maintain its competitiveness when its main rivals are multinationals? ___

4 Why did the farm's owners forge a partnership with its employees? ___

___ / 4

A cooperative farm

Esther Usman interviews farm manager Josh Miller about the ways in which cooperation has driven the success of Appletree Farm.

A

Absolutely not. It was owned by a local family for most of that time. They specialised in the cultivation of fruits and by the 1980s, their produce was on the shelves of most major supermarkets, but the growth of the farm was pushing it beyond its limits. While the family knew farming inside and out, they struggled to run the business side. At the same time, better-managed farms were gaining a competitive edge. The family had no choice but to find new ways of running the business.

B

It mainly was because the owners had been trying to grow the farm in a sustainable way. Whilst interested in modern farming techniques, they were concerned about the environment. If the farm had been taken over by another company, the owners would have had zero influence over such factors in the future. They also understood that the farm's success depended on the collaboration of its workers and that, without their commitment, they would not have been able to achieve their vision.

C

In most business models, the employees are considered less important than the company itself. However, cooperatives are based on principles such as equality and fair pay and, in return, the workers have a responsibility to make the business work. Everyone in a cooperative has equal voting rights and can take part in the decision-making process, so business decisions reflect the interests of the employees.

D

A key point in its favour is that Appletree Farm has a strong corporate identity. We can guarantee higher standards than nearly all our rivals and have loyal customers. As a cooperative, we are part of a wider community of like-minded companies and individuals. We forge partnerships with other cooperatives which help us produce high-quality goods and share expertise in the areas of research and training for our mutual benefit.

E

We take professional development extremely seriously and want everyone in the company to fulfil their potential. Farming methods change all the time so we are constantly organising workshops and courses to keep us up-to-date. Part of our educational programme is also designed for schools and universities, so we offer talks, open days and work experience opportunities. This reflects our commitment to share our knowledge and expertise with the wider public. Many people appreciate that and it has helped ensure the continued success of Appletree Farm.
