Golden rules of wildlife photography

Wildlife photography is a rewarding hobby which requires a diverse set of skills and knowledge. In this article, we set out five key rules to help you understand the subject and take better wildlife pictures.

1 ___
As a wildlife photographer, you should expect to spend hours or even days waiting to get the perfect shot. Therefore, patience is one of the most important qualities you can possess. If you find it difficult to sit still for more than five minutes, wildlife photography probably isn't for you. Not only that, but you should also be prepared to put up with some discomfort. You can't afford to be put off by bad weather because it sometimes gives us our best photo opportunities. What's more, you need to be knowledgeable about your subject so you know when, where and how to find it. The internet is a convenient way of doing your research, but you can learn a great deal from other wildlife photographers so try to hang about with them as well.

2 ___
If you're serious about taking wildlife photos, you should invest in a good quality camera. It needs to be versatile because you'll be using it in different conditions and for a range of shots. You should also make sure your camera isn't restricted to automatic functions. A manual option will give you greater control in more challenging conditions. Similarly, you should also be able to use different lenses, depending on whether you're taking close-ups or wide-angled shots. Most importantly, though, your camera should be weather-sealed to protect it from rain and dust. It might cost more in the short-term, but, in the long-term, the equipment will last longer and won't jam at critical moments.

3 ___
Wildlife photographers must remember that nature always takes priority. The aim of wildlife photography is to show wildlife in its natural habitat. Under no circumstances should you interfere with it, even if it means missing out on the shot of a lifetime. At the same time, you should be careful to portray your subject in its natural habitat as this will contribute to a greater understanding of the wildlife in question. For example, a photograph of a bee would be more ethical if the subject were feeding from a wildflower rather than a soda bottle, which may also look rather odd. Finally, you need to remember the general rule of always getting permission to take photographs. Even in the countryside, the area might belong to someone or it might be protected by local laws. Should you have any doubts, check with the appropriate people.

4 ___
It goes without saying that a wildlife photographer needs to stay out of sight. Clothing should blend into the surroundings and you shouldn't make any rapid movements. What people tend to forget, though, is that camera sounds are just as likely to give you away. Unless you have a silent feature on your camera, it's hard to avoid the 'click' as you take your shot. However, some of the features, like the 'burst' mode which allows you to take several shots one after the other, will make far more noise. It's a great feature for taking action shots, but you should use it with caution because it might scare off your subjects.

5 ___
One of the fundamental rules of wildlife photography is the 'rule of thirds'. It means dividing the frame into a grid with nine squares and placing the subject where the lines meet. Make sure the subject isn't in the centre of the frame, though, as this will draw attention to the empty space around it. However, to avoid making the picture look too crowded, you shouldn't zoom in too much. Ideally, you should leave room in the direction the subject is looking or moving, which will encourage the viewer to imagine what's happening. Finally, the landscape should be taken into account as well. It gives the viewer a better understanding of the life of the subject, so make sure it's not too blurred.

4 Read the article again. Choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D).

1 What does the writer say about wildlife photographers in the first paragraph?
A They should be able to accept a difficult situation without complaining.
B They should have experience of using the internet to carry out research.
C They should enjoy spending their time in bad weather.
D They should avoid sharing information with other wildlife photographers.

2 What point does the writer make about cameras in the second paragraph?
A They usually come with a range of different lenses.
B They do not generally need to be protected from the weather.
C A cheap one is usually just as reliable as an expensive one.
D A manual one is more useful than an automatic one in difficult situations.

3 Why does the writer mention bees in the third paragraph?
A to highlight the way in which their habitats are threatened
B to show why photographers should choose the right background
C to give an example of an unusual shot that the writer missed
D to demonstrate why photographers should get permission before taking photographs

4 What is the writer's view of the sounds that cameras make?
A They are less of a problem than a photographer's rapid movements.
B They are only a problem if a photographer uses the 'burst' mode on their camera.
C They usually blend into other noises in the surrounding area.
D They can sometimes be eliminated by using a special feature on the camera.

5 What advice does the writer give about the way a photograph is arranged?
A Aim to get the subject in the centre of the picture.
B Allow for space on one side of the subject.
C Blur the landscape for a more interesting effect.
D Leave plenty of empty space around the subject.

6 You work at a sports centre whose membership has been decreasing in recent years. You have been asked to write a report which includes:
- an overview of the campaign.
- advantages of the campaign.
- opposition to the campaign.
- conclusions and recommendations.

Use the texts below to help you.

Minutes of management meeting:
– Membership, and so revenue, falling recently overall, but fastest among the 18–30s who see the centre as old-fashioned.
– Rebranding/more up-to-date image a possible long-term solution to attract younger members.
– Estimated budget: €50,000 for a year-long campaign.

Memo to management from staff:
We would like to express our disappointment that the management is considering a rebranding campaign when we feel any money should be spent on investing in your staff, who have not seen an increase in their wages for some time.

To whom it may concern,
As loyal members, we are concerned about the possible rebranding of the sports centre to attract a younger membership. The centre is enjoyed regularly by us as a calm and quiet place where we can relax and socialise as we exercise. An increase in younger members is likely to affect our enjoyment of the centre and possibly our loyalty, too.

Write 200–260 words.
