Golden rules of sports photography

Sports photography is a rewarding hobby which requires a diverse set of skills and knowledge. In this article, we set out five key rules to help you understand the subject and take better sports pictures.

1 ___
You need to know the sports you're covering inside and out, including all the rules, what the players are trying to do and even something about their personalities. If you don't, there's a good chance you'll miss out on the most important shots. A good sports photographer should be able to predict where the action will take place and put themselves in the best position to catch even the most spontaneous activity. If you can get access to the venue before the event, you might be able to find the best spot, but, even then, be ready to move around during the match. The scene is always changing so it's no good staying near the centre line of a football pitch if all the action is taking place at the far end.

2 ___
If you take photography seriously, you need to invest in a decent camera. However, the type of camera will vary depending on the type of photography you're interested in. For photographing sports events, you really need one with a fast shutter time which will allow you to take better action shots. A lot of people also recommend getting a telephoto lens for taking close-up shots. It's a long lens which allows you to zoom in on the subject and it's great for events where you might be far from the action, such as football or rugby. However, it's possible to get closer to the action in some events like running or cycling, in which case you can do without a telephoto lens. Think about what you'll be photographing before wasting your money on gear you don't need.

3 ___
With the possible exceptions of golf or croquet, everything happens fast in sports so you need to be as prepared as possible. For example, if a tennis player is known for a special backhand shot, you need to recognise when it's coming so you can capture the moment. That requires some knowledge about the player, but you also need to set up your equipment properly. In order to not miss that shot, some photographers might have several cameras at different angles which they can use remotely. Should you not be able to afford several cameras, make sure you have at least one with autofocus. You probably won't have time to focus manually so that type of camera is the best way of taking sharper photos.

4 ___
At sports events, there's often lots of advertising which can be eliminated from the shot, but you might need to get creative with your framing. Although the 'rule of thirds' (dividing the frame into nine squares) is helpful for framing your subjects effectively, you shouldn't be afraid to ignore it to get rid of advertising or a more interesting picture. As a rule, you should aim to capture the most emotional moments in the game. Sports photographers tend to rely on face shots, but sometimes emotions are expressed in other ways. For example, a rear shot of an athlete with their hands behind their head in a gesture of defeat can make for a great picture. Finally, sports is all about movement and the best way to convey that is with blurring. That's not normally recommended in photography, but a blurred background will make it look as if the subject is actually moving.

5 ___

Photographers aren't always the most popular people at sports events because they tend to get in the way of spectators and officials. If you want to avoid getting a bad name, do exactly what you're asked to do by officials. Don't argue with them if they ask you to leave an area, but speak to them after the match if you wish to complain. You should also try not to use flash photography during sporting events. Most sports venues have bright lights and your flash won't light up the subject unless they're close by. The only thing it will do is distract the players and they won't appreciate you doing that!

4 Read the article again. Choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D).

1 Why does the writer think photographers need a good understanding of the sports they are covering?
- A So they can get to know the players better.
- B So they know how to recognise photo opportunities.
- C So they are given access to sports venues.
- D So they can predict when the players will act impulsively.

2 What does the writer say about the equipment a sports photographer needs?
- A It's essential to have a telescopic lens for sports events.
- B It's not necessary to invest in an expensive camera.
- C It's a good idea to think carefully before making a purchase.
- D It's not recommended to try close-up shots with a normal lens.

3 Why does the writer recommend having a certain type of camera?
- A So that the image is clearer and more detailed.
- B So that images are taken from different angles.
- C So that the focus can be adjusted manually.
- D So that the camera can be used remotely.

4 What does the writer say about the way pictures are arranged?
- A It is not possible to avoid getting advertising in shots.
- B It is always best to use the 'rule of thirds' for framing.
- C It is not a good idea to include face shots of athletes.
- D It can be good to make the background less clear.

5 How does the writer think photographers should behave at sports events?
- A They should avoid taking the player's attention away from the event.
- B They should show their appreciation to the players during the event.
- C They should avoid complaining to sports officials if there are problems.
- D They should try to be the most popular person at the event.

6 You work at a sports centre whose membership has been decreasing in recent years. You have been asked to write a report which includes:

- an overview of the campaign.
- advantages of the campaign.
- opposition to the campaign.
- conclusions and recommendations.

Use the texts below to help you.

Minutes of management meeting:
- Membership, and so revenue, falling recently overall, but fastest among the 18–30s who see the centre as old-fashioned.
- Rebranding/more up-to-date image a possible long-term solution to attract younger members.
- Estimated budget: €50,000 for a year-long campaign.

Memo to management from staff:
We would like to express our disappointment that the management is considering a rebranding campaign when we feel any money should be spent on investing in your staff, who have not seen an increase in their wages for some time.

To whom it may concern,
As loyal members, we are concerned about the possible rebranding of the sports centre to attract a younger membership. The centre is enjoyed regularly by us as a calm and quiet place where we can relax and socialise as we exercise. An increase in younger members is likely to affect our enjoyment of the centre and possibly our loyalty, too.

Write 200–260 words.
