Golden rules of wildlife photography

Wildlife photography is a rewarding hobby which requires a diverse set of skills and knowledge. In this article, we set out five key rules to help you understand the subject and take better wildlife pictures.

A

As a wildlife photographer, you should expect to spend hours or even days waiting to get the perfect shot. Therefore, patience is key. If you find it difficult to sit still for more than five minutes, wildlife photography isn't for you. You should also be prepared to put up with some discomfort as you can't afford to be put off by bad weather either. What's more, you need to know when, where and how to find your subject. The internet is a convenient way of doing your research, but you can learn a great deal from other wildlife photographers as well.

B

If you're serious about taking wildlife photos, you should invest in a good quality camera. It needs to be versatile and you should also make sure your camera isn't restricted to automatic functions. A manual option will give you greater control in more challenging conditions. Similarly, you should also be able to use different lenses, depending on whether you're taking close-ups or wide-angled shots. Most importantly, though, your camera should be weather-sealed to protect it from rain and dust. It might cost more in the short-term, but, in the long-term, the equipment will last longer and won't jam at critical moments.

C

The aim of wildlife photography is to show wildlife in its natural habitat as this will lead to a greater understanding of the wildlife in question. For example, a photograph of a bee would be more ethical if the subject were feeding from a wildflower rather than a soda bottle. Finally, you always need to get permission to take photographs as even in the countryside, the area might belong to someone or be protected by local laws.

D

It goes without saying that a wildlife photographer needs to stay out of sight. Clothing should blend into the surroundings and you shouldn't make any rapid movements. Camera sounds can also give you away and unless you have a silent feature on your camera, it's hard to avoid the 'click' as you take your shot. However, some features, like the 'burst' mode should be used with caution because it might scare off your subjects.

E

One of the fundamental rules of wildlife photography is the 'rule of thirds'. It means dividing the frame into a grid with nine squares and placing the subject where the lines meet. Make sure the subject isn't in the centre of the frame, though, as this will draw attention to the empty space around it. Ideally, you shouldn't zoom in too much and should leave room in the direction the subject is looking or moving. Finally, the landscape should be taken into account as well. It gives the viewer a better understanding of the life of the subject.

4 Read the article again. Circle the answer (A or B) that best completes each sentence.

0 What does the writer say about wildlife photographers in the first paragraph?

A They should avoid sharing information with other wildlife photographers.	B They should be able to accept a difficult situation without complaining.

1 What point does the writer make about cameras in the second paragraph?

A They usually come with a range of different lenses.	B A manual one is more useful than an automatic one in difficult situations.

2 Why does the writer mention bees in the third paragraph?

A to show why photographers should choose the right background	B to highlight the way in which their habitats are threatened

3 What is the writer's view of the sounds that cameras make?

A They can sometimes be eliminated by using a special feature on the camera.	B They are only a problem if a photographer uses the 'burst' mode on their camera.

4 What advice does the writer give about the way a photograph is arranged?

A Leave plenty of empty space around the subject.	B Allow for space on one side of the subject.

6 You work at a sports centre whose membership has been decreasing.

You have been asked to write a report including:

- an overview of the campaign.
- advantages of the campaign.
- opposition to the campaign.
- conclusions and recommendations.

Use the texts below to help you. Write a review of 200–260 words.

MINUTES OF MANAGEMENT MEETING:

- Membership falling recently but worst among 18–30s who see the centre as old-fashioned.
- Rebranding/more up-to-date image a possible long-term solution to attract younger members.
- Estimated budget: €50,000 for a year-long campaign.

MEMO TO MANAGEMENT FROM STAFF:

We would like to express our disappointment that the management is considering a rebranding campaign. We feel any money should be spent on staff, who have not had a wage increase for some time.

To whom it may concern,
As loyal members, we are concerned about the possible rebranding of the sports centre to attract a younger membership. The centre is enjoyed regularly by us as a calm and quiet place where we can relax and socialise as we exercise. An increase in younger members is likely to affect our enjoyment of the centre and possibly our loyalty, too.
