READING

3 Read four extracts in which people talk about sustainable lifestyles. Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

1 Lola is satisfied that we have made good progress on changing our behaviour. T / F
2 Lola believes that there are several advantages of switching to a plant-based diet. T / F
3 Omar argues that large companies should not be blamed for environmental problems. T / F
4 Omar believes that some corporations have intentionally hidden their activities from the public. T / F
5 Petra feels that publicity about certain types of packaging has changed little. T / F
6 Petra believes that individuals should be making different choices about the products they buy. T / F
7 Joseph thinks that human activity will always be a threat to the world around us. T / F

A Lola
From my point of view, sustainable living means taking personal responsibility for what is happening to the world around us and doing our best to reduce the impact of our actions. It's not as if we haven't been aware of the effects of human activity on the environment for decades, yet, in no way have we changed our behaviour enough. I'm particularly troubled by the Western diet and our overdependence on meat. Only recently did I learn that meat consumption has exploded in the UK, despite the damage the industry does to the environment. Chicken accounts for the largest increase, but beef consumption has also gone up, meaning more land is dedicated to rearing cattle. Consequently, less land is available for forests and woodlands, which are essential for controlling climate change. The solution would be for more of us to switch to a vegetarian diet. Not only is it healthier than a meat-based diet, but it can also reduce emissions of greenhouse gases significantly.

B Omar
It's great that the public are finally waking up to the threat of climate change, and I'm sure we'll overcome this problem. However, we need to work at a much quicker pace. In my opinion, the biggest culprits are the multinational corporations, particularly in the fossil-fuel sector. It's been business as usual for them, despite the harm they're doing to the environment. Thanks to public pressure, corporations want to look like they're doing something now, but I'm not convinced that they're fully committed. Many of them use 'greenwashing', which is clever marketing to make it appear as though they're environmentally friendly, but it's made it harder to keep them to account. Fortunately, people are beginning to see through the greenwashing and companies are increasingly expected to make meaningful changes. Nevertheless, the rate of change isn't fast enough and I'd like to see all companies taking their environmental impact more seriously. Regulations have helped to achieve this in some countries, but a set of global rules is the catalyst we need for real transformation.

C Petra
There's no doubt that individuals must do what they can to achieve a more sustainable lifestyle. At the same time, we need to recognise that our actions alone won't be enough to save the planet. Unless businesses are on board with it, our efforts are doomed to fail. For instance, single-use packaging is as common as ever, yet you would expect its use to have declined given the media coverage. Instead, it almost feels like we've reverted to a time before we knew about climate change. I was recently reminiscing with a friend about the glass milk bottles we used to have delivered to our houses. When the bottle was empty, the milk deliverer would take it back to the dairy in order to be recycled. Whatever happened to that system? Incredibly, it was replaced by plastic cartons, of which only around 20 percent end up being recycled. The problem is that, as an individual, you have no choice but to buy products with this type of packaging. Manufacturers should make it easier for us to lead more sustainable lifestyles by finding alternatives to wasteful packaging.

D Joseph
Personally speaking, I'm not sure that human existence is compatible with sustainability. In order for us to survive, consumption is necessary, but it inevitably changes the environment around us. One of the biggest threats to our existence is the continued use of fossil fuels, but no solution seems to be in sight. It's true that consumption has remained steady for some time, but it's far from sustainable. The problem is that there's little agreement about how to reduce our dependence on it at a global level. Despite attempts to set clear targets by international organisations, governments can't decide what's fair. Developing nations point out that restricting use of fossil fuels limits their prospects of growth and that global warming isn't even their fault. Meanwhile, nations which have benefitted enormously from fossil-fuel use are asking them to reduce their consumption. The problem of climate change can only be solved by all countries working together. That said, I'm pessimistic about our chances of being able to achieve it.

4 Read the extracts again. For questions 1–4, choose the correct speaker (A, B, C or D). The speakers may be chosen more than once.

Which speaker …

1 has a different opinion from Lola on whether the amount of resources humans use is increasing?
2 takes the same view as Omar that environmental issues need to be dealt with internationally? ___
3 shares the same opinion as Petra about the need for individuals to take responsibility for creating a more sustainable way of life? ___
4 has a different view to Joseph about our chances of effectively dealing with climate change? ___

WRITING

5 Read the comment on a blog post. Choose the most appropriate words to complete the comment.

Some people are dead against loanwords but [1]what on earth's wrong / what is the problem with absorbing foreign words into your language? In fact, [2]one of the things / what I love about English is that [3]we've got / we have so many foreign words. Take 'schadenfreude', which [4]we've / has been borrowed from German. If I'm not wrong, it means 'to take pleasure from someone else's misfortune.' How else could you say that in English? It'd be [5]a right mouthful / really difficult to say!

6 Read the blog posts below. Write a comment responding to each one.

I can't stand vegetarians because they just want to make the rest of us feel guilty for eating meat. They're always going on about how it's bad for the environment or worrying about the poor little animals. What's really wrong with eating meat? It's what we've done for thousands of years and no one's complained about it before. TBH I'm not even sure it's healthy to be a vegetarian. Don't we need meat for a balanced diet?

I don't understand why anyone would buy second-hand clothes. What annoys me most is when people call it vintage fashion. Who are they trying to fool? They're just trying to make it sound trendier than it really is. In my opinion, second-hand clothes are usually shabby and I'd rather spend my hard-earned cash on something decent. Anyone with any pride in themselves would do the same.

Write 100–130 words for each of your comments.
