1A GRAMMAR: narrative tenses

Sharing experiences

Materials: One worksheet per student

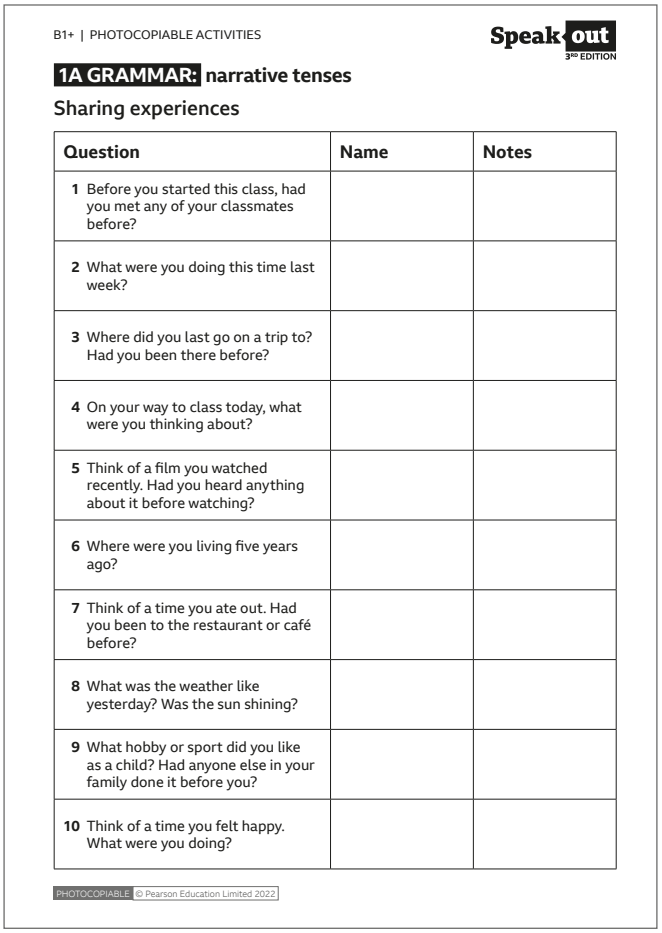

Time: 20–30 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do a discussion activity to practise narrative tenses. Give each student a worksheet and point out that some of the questions use the past continuous and some use the past perfect. You could ask students to identify the narrative tense in each question. (Cards 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10 include past continuous questions, and cards 1, 3, 5, 7 and 9 include past perfect questions.) Explain that students need to mingle and ask a different classmate each question, writing their classmate's name and making notes on their answer in the relevant columns. They can ask the questions in any order and should share detail and ask follow-up questions using narrative tenses.

Conduct the class mingle. Students circulate, asking and answering each other's questions. Circulate during the mingle yourself, assisting as necessary. You could also take part, interacting with students to carry out an informal assessment of their use of the target forms, to offer encouragement and to connect with them at this early stage of the course.

After the mingle, students could work in pairs and share what they found out about their classmates to see if there is anything in common. To finish, elicit a few interesting things students found out in class feedback.

Alternatively, instead of a mingle, students could ask and answer the questions in pairs or small groups.

1A VOCABULARY: describing possessions; materials

Say two things made of …

Materials: One set of cards per group of four

Time: 10–15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise vocabulary for describing possessions. Explain that they are going to work in two teams, taking turns to pick up and read out cards with materials on them. When they hear a material, they need to say two things commonly made of it within ten seconds. Demonstrate by saying a word not on the cards, e.g. 'paper' and eliciting things made out of paper, e.g. notebook, newspaper, envelope, paper plane.

Put students in groups of four (two teams of two) and give each group a set of cards face down in a pile. Students take turns to turn over the top card and read the material for the other team, who must say two things made with that material within ten seconds. If they succeed, they keep the card. If they don't, it is placed at the bottom of the pile. When all the cards have been used, the team with the most cards is the winner. Finish by eliciting some items for each card from the class. Fast finishers could place the cards face up and discuss whether they own any of the items they named and tell each other about them.

As an optional follow-up, ask groups to work together to group the materials on the cards in sets of their choice. Then ask them to compare how they grouped the words with another group or as a class.

POSSIBLE ANSWERS:

cotton: gloves, sheets, socks, towel
denim: jacket, jeans, shirt, skirt diamond: bracelet, earrings, necklace, ring glass: bottle, bowl, jar, window gold: necklace, pen, ring, tooth iron: horseshoe, magnet, pan, pot plastic: bottle, cup, plate, toy rubber: ball, gloves, mat, stamp silver: necklace, pen, ring, tray steel: car, drum, pan, pot stone: bridge, path, steps, wall
wood: chair, floor, house, table

1B GRAMMAR: verb patterns

Make-your-own questions

Materials: One worksheet per pair, cut in half

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise verb patterns. Give each student half a worksheet and explain that they need to work with someone with the same worksheet to make up six questions using the question beginnings 1–6 and the correct -ing or infinitive form of a verb. To do this, they can use the phrases in the box or their own ideas. Circulate as students complete their questions, checking verb forms as needed, then put students in A/B pairs to ask and answer their questions. Encourage students to give reasons for their answers and ask follow-up questions. Finish by eliciting some example questions which include verbs followed by -ing or infinitive with a change in meaning (e.g. go on, grow up, remember, stop) and discuss the meaning of the verb in each question.

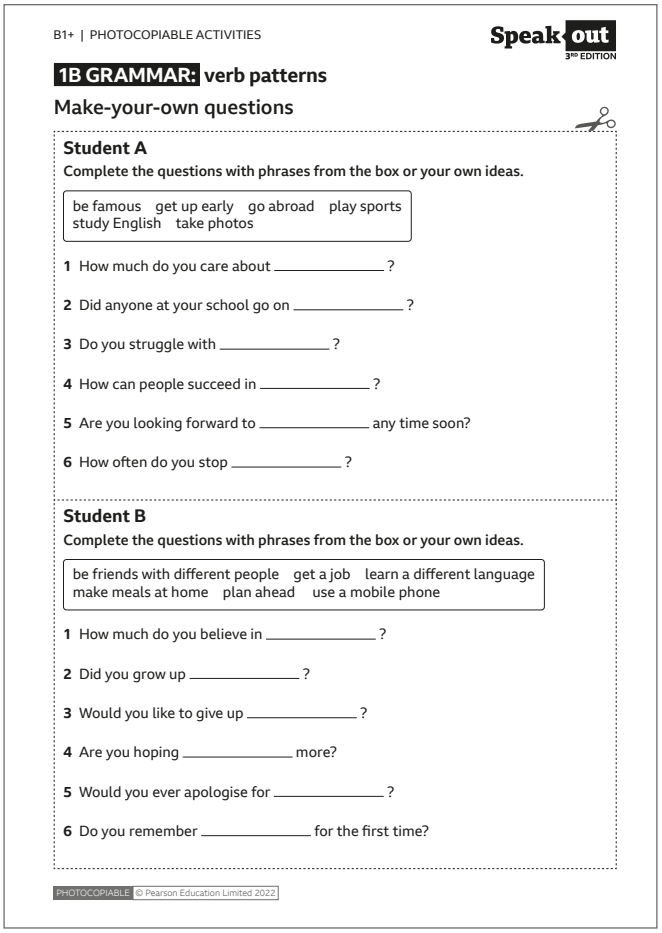

POSSIBLE QUESTIONS:

Student A

1. How much do you care about going abroad?
2. Did anyone at your school go on to be famous?
3. Do you struggle with getting up early?
4. How can people succeed in studying English?
5. Are you looking forward to playing sports any time soon?
6. How often do you stop to take photos?

Student B

1. How much do you believe in planning ahead?
2. Did you grow up making meals at home?
3. Would you like to give up using a mobile phone?
4. Are you hoping to be friends with different people more?

1B VOCABULARY: personal preferences

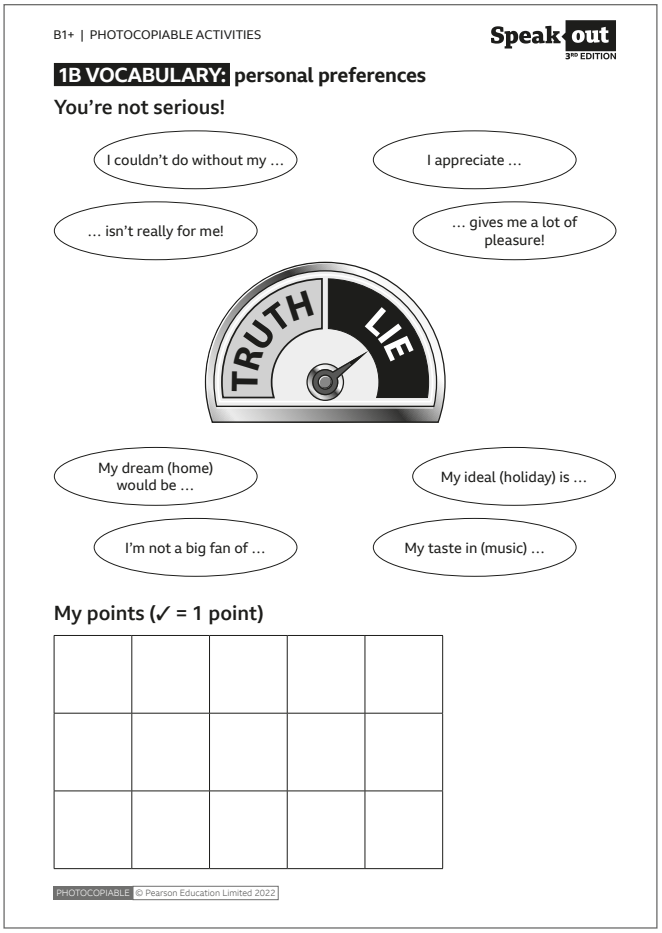

You're not serious!

Materials: One worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a class game to practise language for personal preferences. Give each student a worksheet and model the activity by giving some example sentences about yourself using the prompts, e.g. 'I couldn't do without my morning coffee.', 'Teaching this class gives me a lot of pleasure!', 'My ideal holiday is camping in the country.' Ask students to guess if each is true or false. Point out the title of the worksheet, You're not serious!, which can be used if they think a sentence is false. Give students a few minutes to think about (or note) possible true and false sentences for each prompt while you circulate, assisting as required. Explain that students will now move around the classroom forming different pairs and taking turns to say a sentence with one of the prompts on the worksheet, which may be true or false. The other student listens and guesses whether it is true or false. Students can ask for some follow-up information before they guess. If their guess is correct, the student gets a point, which they can record by ticking a box in the grid at the bottom of their worksheet. The student who has the most points after a set time limit, e.g. ten to fifteen minutes, is the winner.

Alternatively, the first student who gets to fifteen points is the winner. In weaker classes, students could write down sentences for all the prompts before the mingle.

1C HOW TO … leave phone messages

Be polite!

Materials: One set of cards per pair

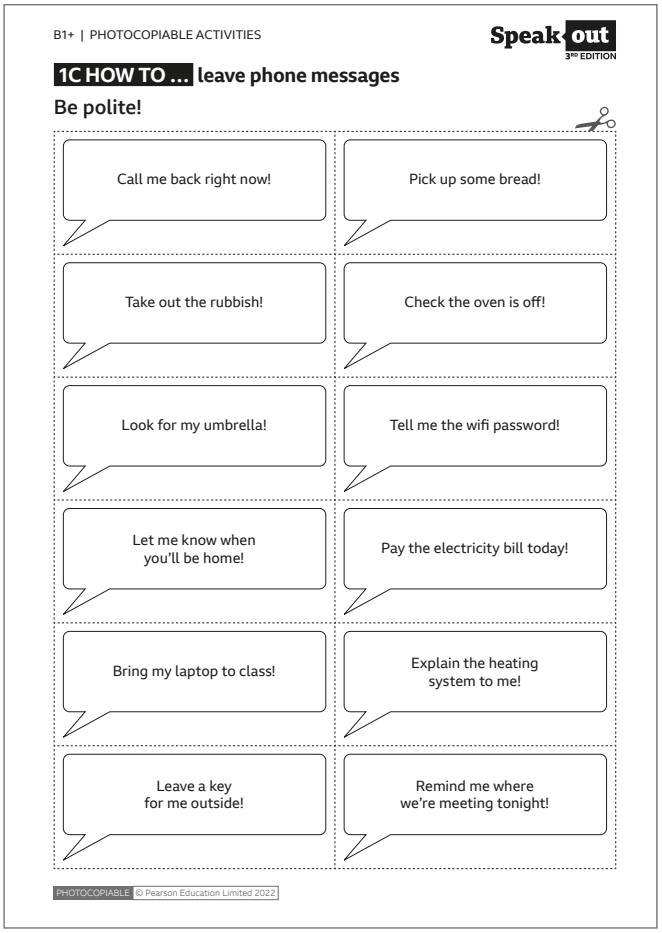

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to roleplay leaving polite phone messages. Write the following prompts on the board for students to refer to during the activity as required: Do you think you'll be able to … ?, Would you … ?, Could you … ?, Can you … ?, I wonder if you would mind … ? Remind students of the four main parts of leaving a phone message: starting, making a polite request, giving detail and asking for further action. This activity focuses particularly on making polite requests, but students should include the other aspects where relevant, too.

Put students in pairs and give each pair a set of cards face down. Explain that each card has a short, very direct message on it, and write an example not on the cards on the board, e.g. Bring my bag to work! Model a recorded answerphone message yourself, e.g. 'This is Cara Herrera, I can't come to the phone right now, but please leave a message after the tone.' Then ask a stronger student to leave a polite form of the message on the board on your 'answerphone', e.g. 'Hi, this is Taka. I'm at work, but I don't have my bag. I wonder if you would mind bringing it to my work, please? Thank you!' If necessary, model an additional example from the cards with a pair of stronger students.

Encourage students to use a range of phrases from the board and/or Grammar Bank 1C in their messages. Fast finishers could shuffle the cards and repeat some of them, aiming to increase fluency and refer to the board / Grammar Bank less or not at all.

To finish, invite a few pairs to share one of their roleplay messages with the class.

2A GRAMMAR: present perfect continuous

What's been happening lately?

Materials: One card per student

Time: 20–25 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do a discussion activity to practise the present perfect continuous. Give each student a card (in large classes, it's fine to have some duplicate cards, and in classes of six and under you could give each student two cards). Explain that students need to move around the classroom asking different students their question(s) and then report some things they found out back to the class. (They can take notes in their notebooks or on the back of their cards if they wish.) Write the following prompts on the board for students to use in their interviews:

recently

lately

since 2020 / last year / yesterday / …

for five years / a few months / …

Circulate during the mingle, listening for correct use of the present perfect continuous with the prompt words and assisting with other language as required. After the mingle, give students a few minutes to think about how to summarise any patterns they noticed or any particularly interesting answers to their questions for the class. Conduct class feedback, inviting each student to share what they found out. If you have a very large class, they could share their answers in groups.

Students work together to match the cards to form sentences. Check answers as a class. In their groups, students then discuss whether each sentence is true for them, adapting it as necessary, e.g. 'I often put off tidying my room / throwing out things I don't need / having difficult conversations.'

To finish, invite a few groups to share one of the sentences they changed.

2B GRAMMAR: relative clauses

Block guess

Materials: One set of cards per group of four, cut into an instructions card and four cards

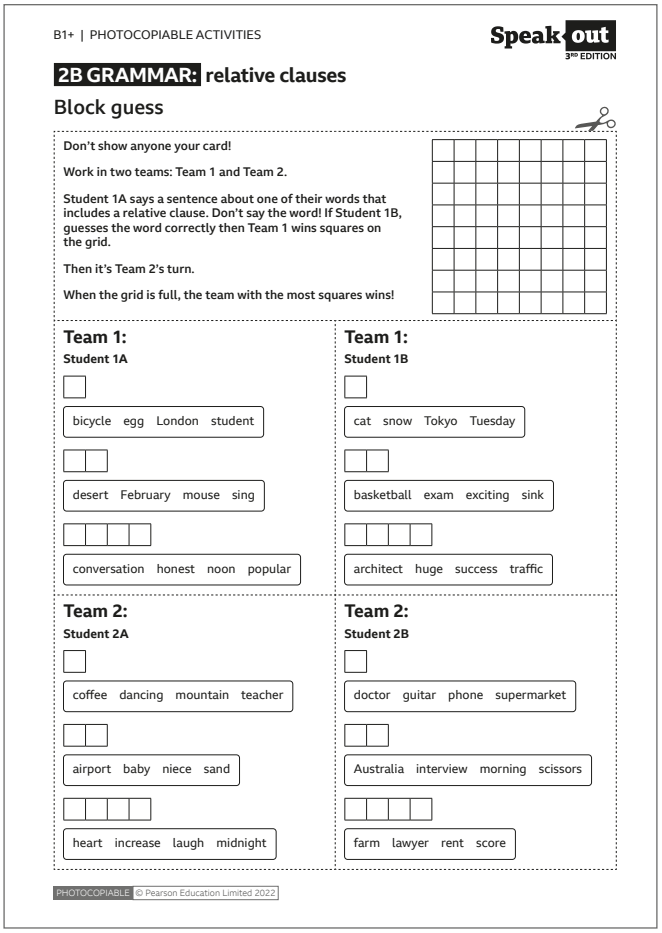

Time: 20–25 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise forming sentences with relative clauses. Put students in groups of four. Give each group an instructions card and give each student a word card, emphasising that they shouldn't show it to anyone else. Go through the instructions, explaining that the words worth one square are easier to describe than the words worth four squares. Emphasise that sentences students use to describe their words must include a relative clause and shouldn't include the word itself, or any form of that word (the other team will check this). When their team win squares, students can colour them in anywhere on the grid, but they must be as a block (e.g. four in a row, two in a row, etc. vertically or horizontally).

Give some example sentences with relative clauses for words not on the cards and ask students to guess the word, e.g. 'This is the month which comes after July.' (August), 'This is a person who takes your order at a café.' (a waiter), 'This is a meal (which/that) you eat in the morning.' (breakfast). In their groups, students play the game. Encourage them to use a range of relative pronouns and to also practise omitting them where possible. Circulate, checking any sentences that students are unsure of.

When the grid is full, or when students can't fill in any more squares, the team with the most squares wins. Fast finishers can describe and guess any words not used as part of the game.

With weaker classes, have an additional stage before students play the game in groups where they form their sentences with someone who has the same card as them. To make it even easier, students could make their card visible to their teammate during the guessing stage so they can see the possible options.

3A GRAMMAR: conditional structures: unless, even if, in case (of)

Promo products

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise conditional structures with unless, even if and in case (of). Put students in groups of three and explain that they should imagine their language school, university or workplace has asked them to choose some possible promotional products. These will be printed with the logo and be available for people to buy and/or be given away to customers. In their groups, students need to discuss the options, then select their top three products. Explain that they should think about popularity, usefulness and potential advertising through each product. Give each group a set of cards face down. Students take turns to turn over a card and give their opinion about how good the item would be as a promotional product. Suggestions and responses should both use at least one sentence that includes unless, even if or in case (of), e.g.

A: So, pens are always useful even if you already have a lot of them.

B: I agree, even if people have a pen, they might buy another one because it would be cheap.

Once students have discussed all the cards, they select their top three promotional products as a group. Put two groups together to present their choices (including reasons for each of their three items), using conditional structures where possible. Invite students to share any key similarities or differences between their choices with reasons, or other ideas for items that they would suggest, in group feedback.

3A VOCABULARY: work phrases

Pelmanism

Materials: One set of cards per pair

Time: 10 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise work phrases. Put students in pairs and give each pair a set of cards. Students spread the cards face down on the table, then take turns to turn over two at a time. If they form a collocation, they say a sentence using it and keep the cards. If the cards don't match, or the student can't make a suitable sentence, they are turned face down again in the same position. The student with the most pairs when all the cards have been used wins. Circulate during the game, checking sentences as needed.

Before students begin, write some possible sentence prompts on the board, e.g.

When I … , I …

People who …

I always/often/sometimes/never … because …

Weaker classes could play the game in groups of three, or with two pairs competing against each other.

As an optional follow-up, students put the verb cards aside and place the nouns/phrases face down in a pile. In groups of three, students take turns to draw a card and read it aloud. The other students have to call out the full phrase with the verb, e.g. A: 'out of the way', B: 'get something out of the way'. The student who calls out the full phrase correctly first keeps the card, and the student with the most cards at the end of the game wins.

Noughts and crosses

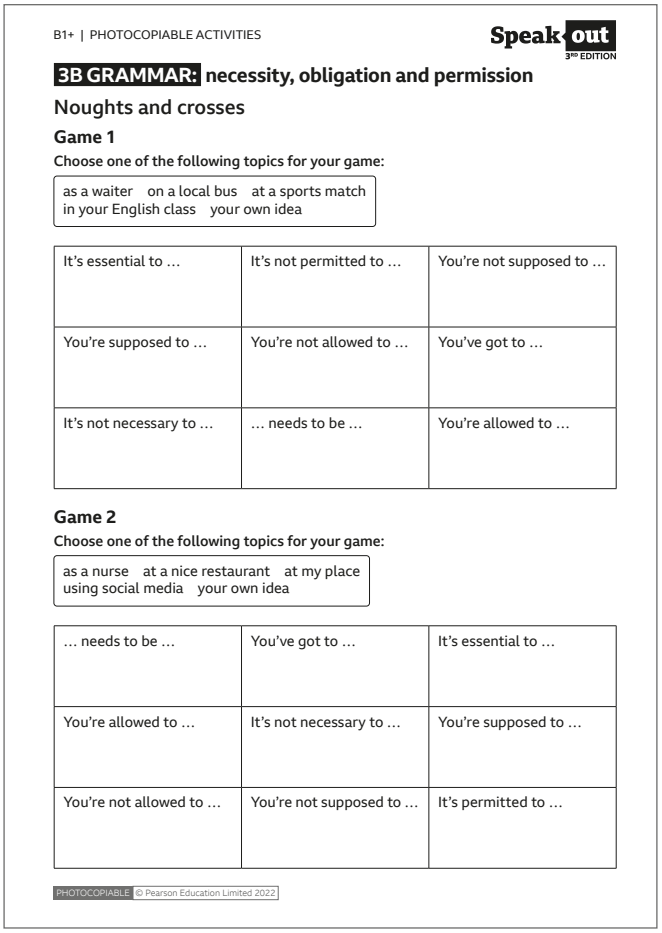

Materials: One worksheet per pair, plus a few extra worksheets for fast finishers

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game of noughts and crosses to practise phrases for necessity, obligation and permission. Check students know how to play the game by demonstrating on the board – two students take turns to put a 0 or a X in a square. If a player gets three of their symbols in a row, they win the game. Put students in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Explain that together they should choose one of the topics from the box for the first game and that this will be the context for all the sentences during that game. Tell them that to win a square, they have to make a suitable sentence for their chosen topic using the phrase for necessity, obligation or permission in the square. If a student forms a correct sentence, they win the square and write their symbol (0 or X) in it. If they are incorrect, they lose their turn. The first player to win three squares in a row horizontally, vertically or diagonally wins the game.

Monitor closely as students play, assisting with sentences as necessary. When students have finished both games, they can complete any of the squares not completed during the games.

Fast finishers could play again on an extra worksheet, choosing different topics. Alternatively, students choose a topic and work together to complete one of the grids about it. They then read their sentences to another pair of students, who guess the topic.

4A GRAMMAR: past plans and intentions

Art thieves

Materials: One set of cards per group of six to eight

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise talking about past plans and intentions. Elicit the meaning of thief and innocent (adjective), then put students in groups of six to eight and give each group a set of cards. If you have groups with only six or seven students, remove one or two of the innocent cards, making sure that each group always has two thief cards. Tell students the following information:

You all work at the local art gallery and have access to the building. Last night two very valuable pieces of art were stolen from the gallery by someone with building access. All the other gallery staff were at a party for a new exhibition, but you didn't show up. Now you're all suspects in the robbery, but only two of you in each group are the real thieves.

Groups shuffle the cards and distribute one to each person in the group. Students do not show anyone else their card. Tell everyone to close their eyes. Ask the thieves in each group to briefly open their eyes so that they can see who the other thief is. Then everyone opens their eyes. Write the following questions on the board:

Why weren't you at the party last night?

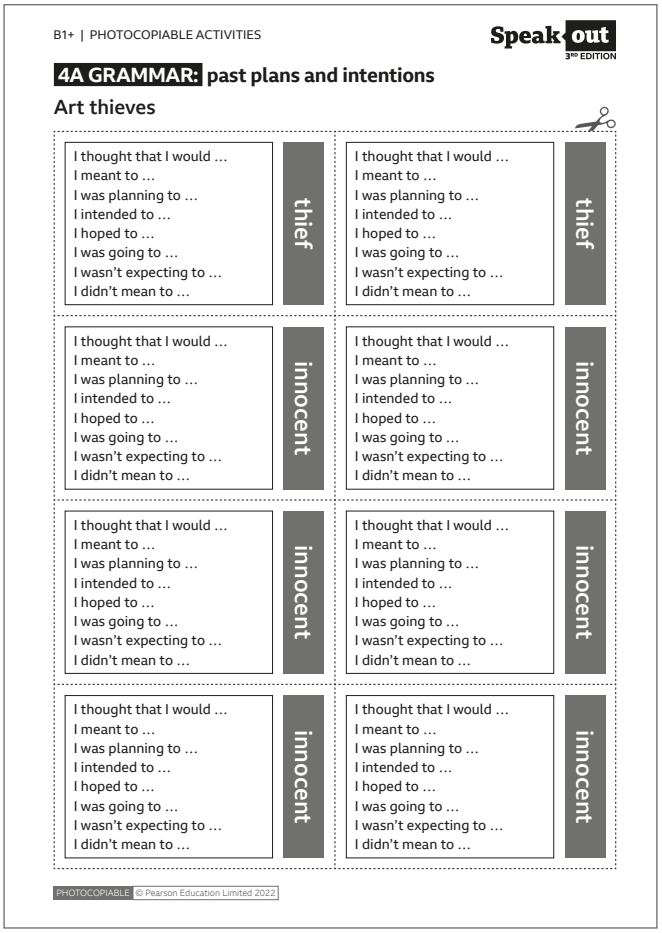

Why didn't you let anyone know you wouldn't be there?

Are you a thief?

Remind students not to show anyone else their card and explain that they have a couple of minutes to think up a reason for not being at the party that will convince the others that they are innocent, whether they really are or not. To do this, they need to use at least three of the target phrases on their cards to come up with a creative excuse, e.g. 'I'm innocent. I meant to be at the party, but I was so tired that I fell asleep on the sofa. I wasn't expecting to fall asleep and I certainly didn't mean to miss the party!' Circulate as students write their excuses, assisting as required.

When they have all finished, students go around the group sharing their excuses about why they weren't at the party. After everyone has spoken, students ask each other questions or try to convince each other further that they are innocent, then vote for who they think the thieves are. If a majority of students vote for a thief (either one or both of the thieves) then all of the innocent players win the game. However, if a majority of students vote for innocent players, then the thieves win.

Cards can be shuffled and the game can be played again for extra practice.

4A VOCABULARY: truth and lies

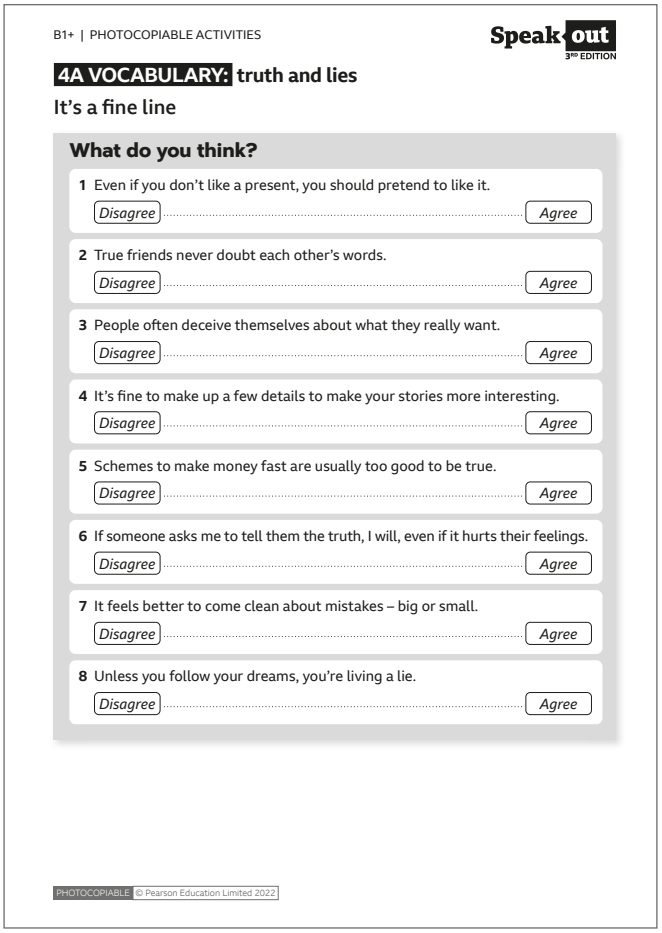

It's a fine line

Materials: One worksheet per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise vocabulary for truth and lies. Give each student a worksheet and give them a few minutes to read the statements and place a cross somewhere on the line, depending on how strongly they agree or disagree with each one. Emphasise that this is a matter of opinion and that there are no right or wrong answers. Put students in pairs or small groups to discuss their answers, giving reasons, then ask a few pairs/groups to share their answer to one question in class feedback.

As an active alternative, either before discussion or as an optional follow-up, allocate one wall of the classroom as 'agree', the opposite wall as 'disagree' and the area in between as representing the space between those two viewpoints. Read each sentence twice and ask students to stand in a position between the walls, depending on how much they agree or disagree with each statement. Ask a few students why they chose their standing position before reading the next statement.

4B GRAMMAR: indirect and negative questions

Cross the board

Materials: One worksheet per pair

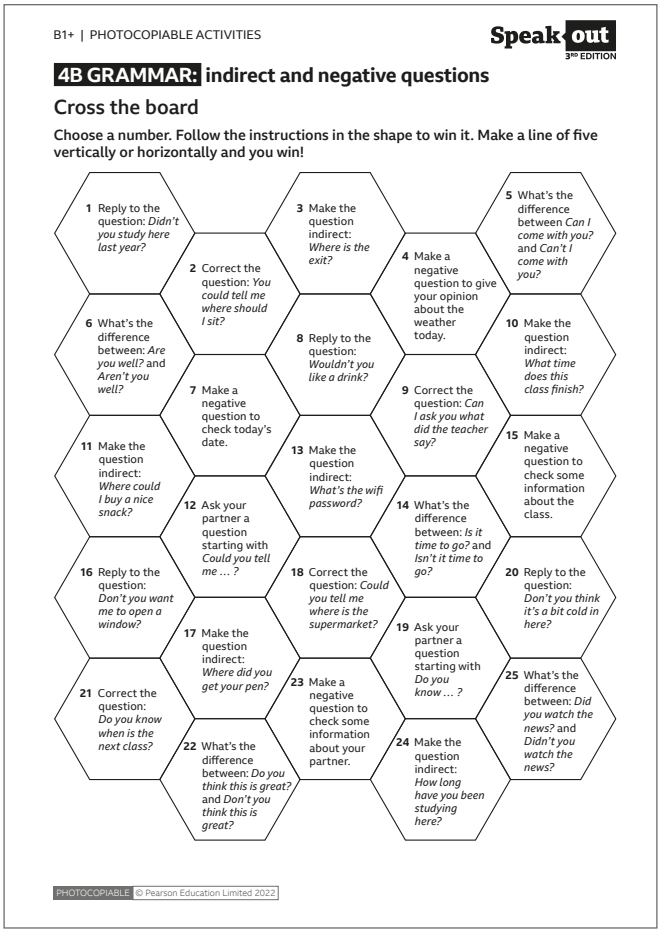

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise indirect and negative questions. Put them in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Explain that students will take turns to choose a shape and answer the question in it. If they complete the task correctly, they 'win' the shape. The aim is to win five shapes in a row across or down the board.

Students play the game. If they aren't sure their partner's answer is correct, they should check with you. If a student's answer is not correct, their turn is over and they don't win the shape. When a student wins a shape, they mark it with their name/initials or a large 'X'.

Circulate while students play, assisting as required. Finish by eliciting answers from the class for some of the shapes.

Alternatively, the game can be played in teams of two students, with pairs taking turns to follow the instructions and win shapes.

4B VOCABULARY: adjectives to describe films; films and film-making Cut!

Materials: One set of cards per group of four to six

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise vocabulary related to films and film-making. Elicit or explain that a director often uses the word 'Cut!' to tell the crew to stop filming. Put students in teams of two or three and explain that they will be playing against another team. Give each group (of two teams) a set of cards face down.

Explain that a player from the first team must take a card without showing it to their partner or teammates, then describe the word on it without using the word in bold or any form of the word they are describing. Once the student has looked at the card, they pass it to the other team briefly so that they can see the target word and the forbidden word. The student then has one minute to describe the word to their partner/teammates while the other team keeps time and makes sure they don't say the forbidden word. If their partner/teammates guess the word correctly within that time, they keep the card. If they don't, they give it to the other team. If the student speaking says the forbidden word or any form of the word they are describing, or if time runs out, the other team calls out 'Cut!' and takes the card and then play moves to them. When all the cards have been used, the team with the most cards is the winner.

Alternatively, students get turns of one minute to pick up and describe as many cards as they can to their partner/teammates.

4C HOW TO ... talk about the news

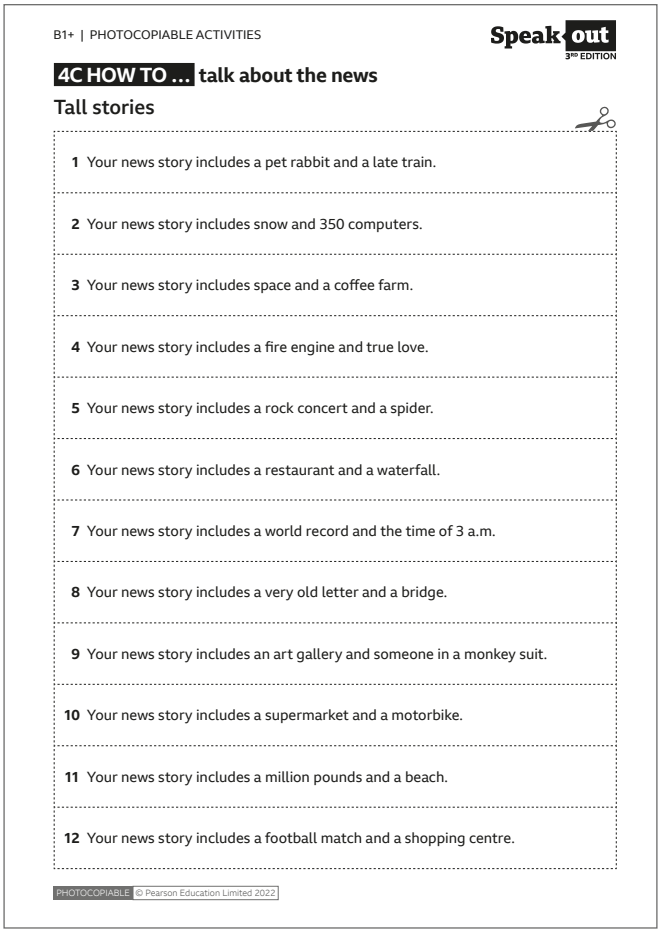

Tall stories

Materials: One card per pair

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise talking about the news. Explain that they are going to be telling 'tall stories' and elicit what the phrase means (made-up stories rather than true ones). Put students in A/B pairs and give each pair a card, which they shouldn't show to anyone else. Give them ten minutes to make up the outline of an imaginary news story using the items on their card, writing notes if they wish.

Explain that students will now practise telling their stories informally, and should include phrases to initiate the discussion, describe the news story and comment on it from Grammar Bank 4C. They should also be as creative as possible. Circulate as students rehearse their stories, still in their pairs, assisting with language as required. Then divide the class into A/B groups, separating pairs that worked together on their news stories. Students mingle within their groups, sharing and responding to each other's stories. To finish, invite a few volunteer pairs to roleplay sharing and responding to a news story and/or vote for the most entertaining news story in the class.

5A GRAMMAR: clauses of purpose: to, so as to, in order to/that, so that

A reason for everything

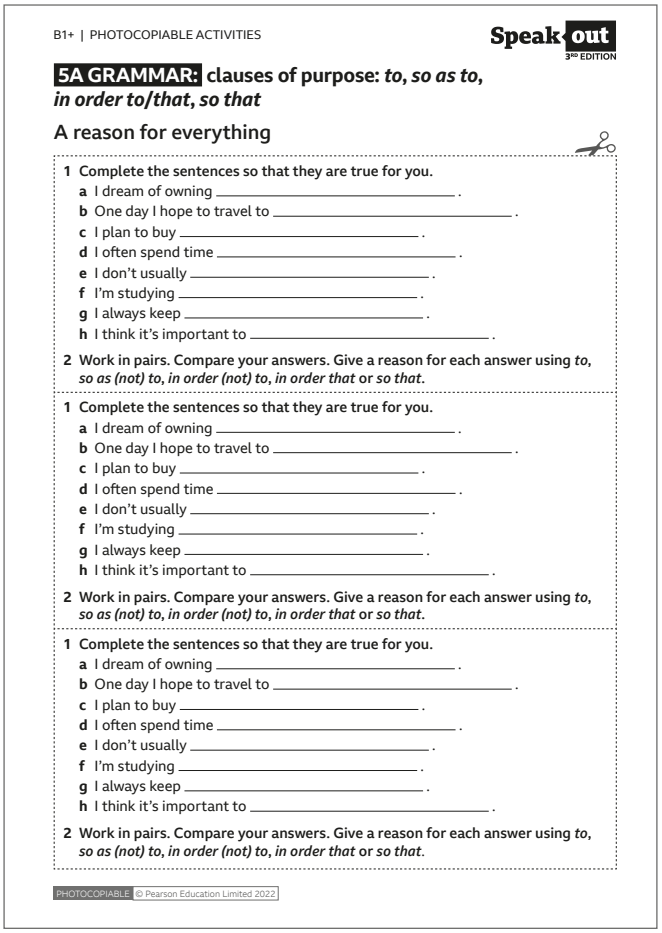

Materials: One card per student

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise clauses of purpose. Give each student a card and give them a few minutes to complete sentences a–h with a word or phrase, e.g. 'I dream of owning an electric bike.', 'One day I hope to travel to the mountains in Canada.', 'I plan to buy some fruit on my way home today.' Explain that although they do not need to add a clause of purpose to their answers, they should still think about their reasons for writing each sentence.

When students have finished, put them in pairs to compare their answers, giving a reason for each one using a clause of purpose, e.g. 'I dream of owning an electric bike so that I could ride to school really quickly.' Ask students to use a range of clauses of purpose in their explanations and to try and include at least one negative, e.g. 'I always keep pictures of receipts in order not to need the paper copies.' Finish by asking a few students to share one of their sentences and reasons with a clause of purpose with the class.

Alternatively, to challenge stronger classes, suggest students invert some of their sentences to begin with clauses of purpose when they share them, e.g. 'In order to learn more about myself, one day I hope to travel to new places.'

Write the following prompts on the board:

You should/shouldn't be …

Try (not) to be …

Write an example situation not on the cards on the board, e.g. If you're about to give a speech in front of a large audience. and elicit advice from the class, e.g. 'Be calm.', 'Try to be confident!' Encourage stronger students to use modifiers before the adjectives, e.g. quite/very/really. Before students start giving advice, give them time to think of and write two situations to ask their partner about for items 7 and 8, while you circulate, assisting if necessary. Monitor while students do the activity, then finish by eliciting a few examples of how students used the personality adjectives in their advice.

5B GRAMMAR: comparative and superlative structures

Thirty-second sales talk

Materials: One worksheet per pair

Time: 20–30 minutes

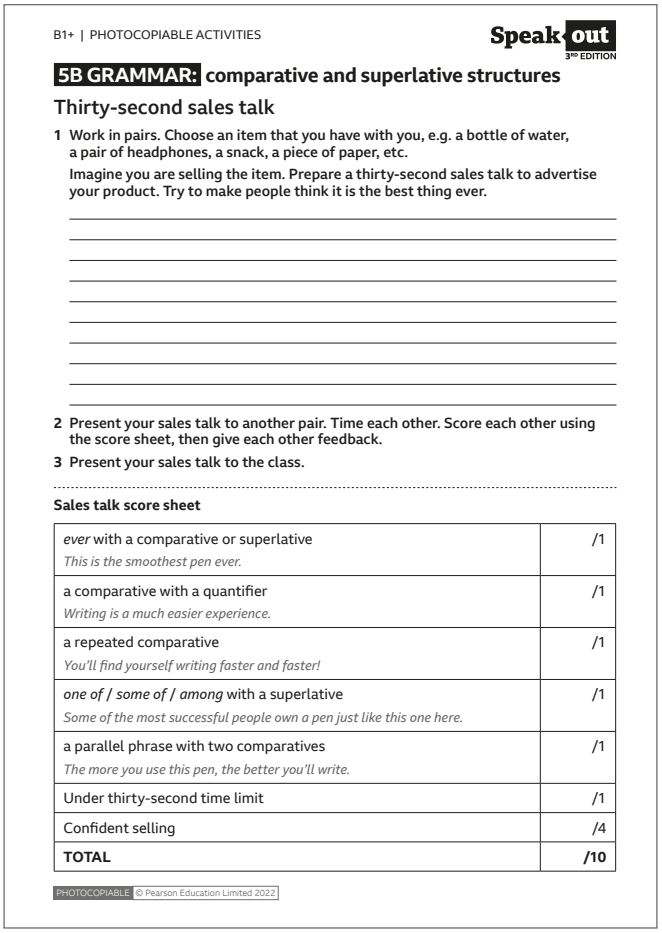

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise comparative and superlative structures. Set the scene by asking students to imagine that they are amazing salespeople who can sell anything. Demonstrate by giving a short sales talk about something on your desk, e.g. a pen, including some comparative and superlative structures. Explain that students are going to write a similar sales talk for something that they have and try to make people believe it is the best thing ever.

Put students in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Go through the instructions and the score sheet and examples and ask students not to choose a pen, as you have demonstrated how to sell one in the example. Point out that to get maximum points, they need to use all the structures on the score sheet at least once in their talk. They should be creative and can use humour in their talk if they wish. Elicit some tips for confident public speaking, e.g. stand up straight, speak so people can hear you, pause, try to avoid saying 'umm', use gestures, etc. Then circulate while students work on their sales talks, providing assistance with language and ideas as required. Give a time limit for this preparation stage, e.g. fifteen minutes, and make sure students are clear that they should share the presentation, with each speaking for more or less the same length of time.

For Ex 2, put two pairs together to give their talks. They may need to give the talk more than once for the other pair to score the talk accurately. After scoring, they should tear/cut their score sheet along the line indicated to give to the other pair. Give students time to make any final changes to their presentations if necessary.

Pairs then take turns to present their sales talks to the class and you could take a vote for the best thirty-second sales talk.

Alternatively, rather than pairs scoring each other in Ex 2, they could score themselves before they give their presentation to the class.

5B VOCABULARY: advertising; money

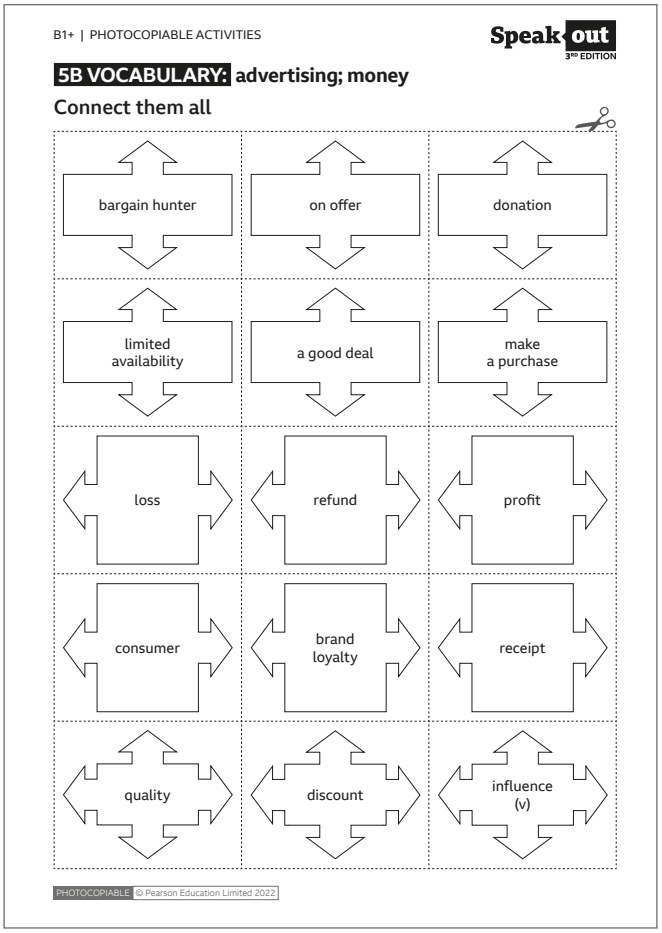

Connect them all

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise vocabulary related to advertising and money. Put students in groups of three and give each group a set of cards to divide equally among themselves. Tell students that the person with the 'discount' card places it down to start the game. The next student chooses one of their cards and says a sentence connecting the meaning to the card on the table in some way. They then place the card down on the table so that the arrows on the cards connect, e.g. 'Sometimes consumers spend more if there are discounts on products.' Play then passes to the next student, who can only put down a card if they can make a sentence connecting it to a placed card so that two arrows connect. Students can help each other form sentences and correct their own mistakes. When all cards have been placed on the table, students could compare their connections with another group, and ask questions about their cards, e.g. 'What is the connection between consumer and receipt?'

For a more challenging alternative for fast finishers or stronger classes, students place one card (with four arrows) face up on the table and the others face down in a pile, then take turns to draw a card and try to make a connection to one of the cards on the table.

5C HOW TO … summarise information from different sources

Group decisions

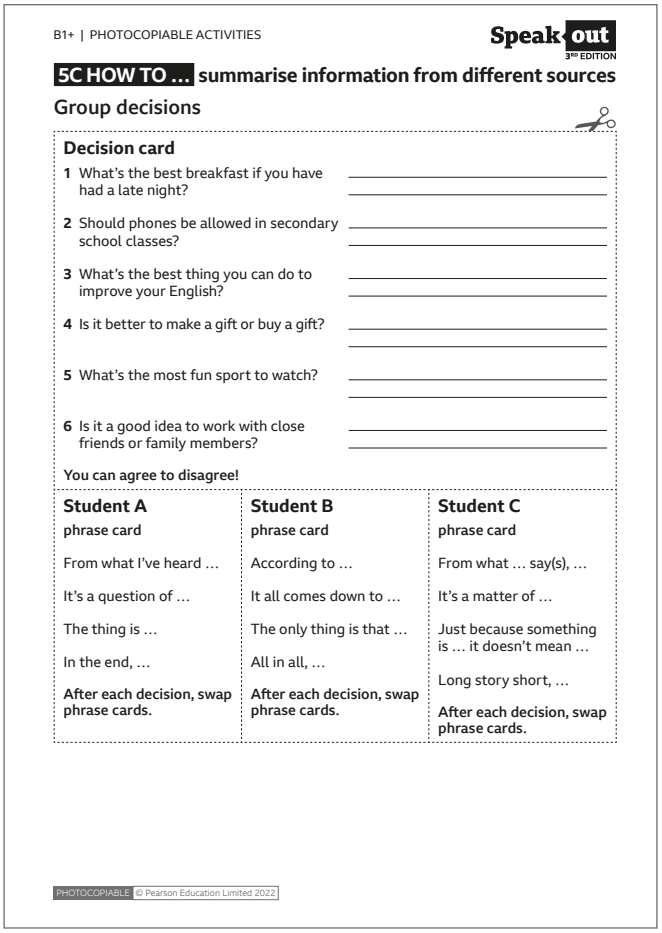

Materials: One set of cards per group of three, cut into a decision card and three student cards

Time: 20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise summarising information in a discussion. Put students in groups of three or four. Give each group a decision card, which they place face up on the table. Explain that together, the students need to give their opinions about the six questions and take notes on how the other students respond. Give students a time limit for this, e.g. ten minutes. Students exchange opinions and take notes (in their notebooks, not on the card) to report in the discussion that will follow.

When they have finished, put students in new groups of three with a decision card. Give each student in the group a phrase card, A–C. Explain that the new group now needs to discuss the questions, with students using the phrase cards and their notes to add details and ideas from their first discussion, e.g. 'According to Freda, the best breakfast after a late night is fried eggs on toast.', 'Long story short, we agreed the best breakfast was one someone else made for you!', 'From what Jamal says, it should be something sweet.' While discussing each question, students should try to use all of the phrases on their phrase card. When they have come to a decision, they write it on the decision card. After each decision, students swap phrase cards so that they each have one with a new set of phrases to use. If after all the phrases have been used, students can't decide on the answer to a question, they can agree to disagree on it. Circulate as students discuss the questions, assisting with language and appropriate use of the target phrases. To finish, invite groups to share one or more of their decisions with the class and summarise how they came to the decision using some of the phrases from the lesson.

For a longer activity, after the group decisions but before class feedback, students could form new groups of three, summarising and comparing the decisions they came to in their first group, using the target language.

6A GRAMMAR: so and such

Heads or tails

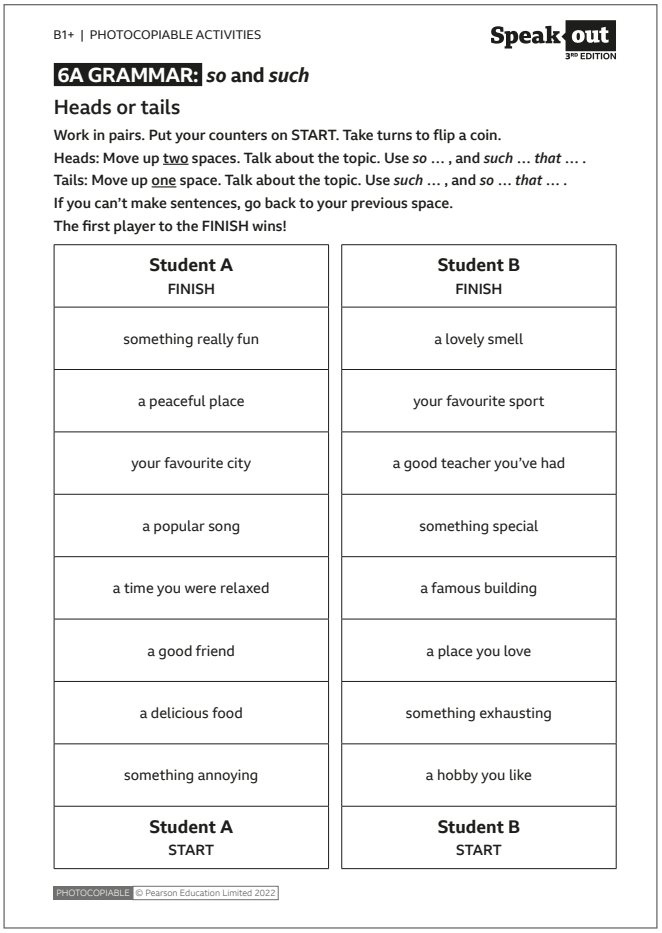

Materials: One worksheet per pair; coins; counters (or scraps of paper)

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise using so and such. Put them in pairs and give each pair a worksheet and a coin (or ask them to find one). Check students understand that heads is one side of the coin (usually with a head on it) and tails is the other side.

Go through the instructions on the worksheet and demonstrate the game. Each student puts their counter on one of the START spaces. Student A flips the coin. If it lands on heads, they move up two spaces and if it lands on tails, one space. When they move to a space, they must make two sentences about the topic using the constructions indicated, e.g. after throwing heads to land on a delicious food, Student A could say 'Avocado on toast is so delicious. It's such a good breakfast that I have it twice a week!' If students can't make two sentences about the topic given with so and such, then they go back to their previous space (or START, in this case). Circulate as students play the game, monitoring and assisting with language as required. If time allows, students could swap A/B roles and play again.

To finish, choose a few topics from the game board and elicit some of the sentences students made about them using so and such.

6A VOCABULARY: areas of a city

Your town

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

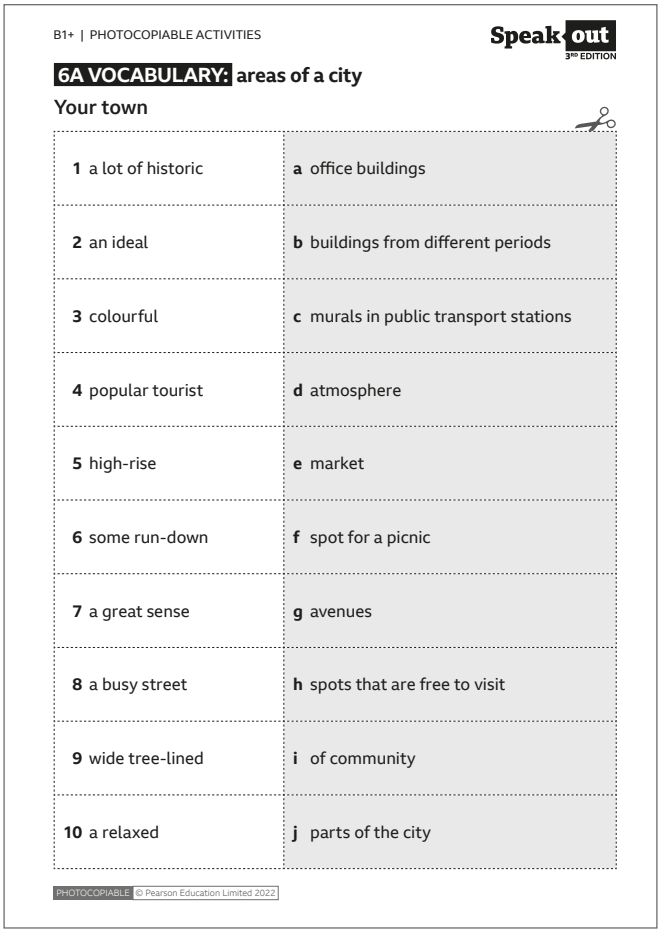

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do a matching activity, then have a discussion to practise vocabulary for areas of a city. Put students in groups of three and give each group a set of cards. Explain that students need to match the cards to form collocations with the target vocabulary. Give students time to match the cards, then check answers as a class. For the discussion, students could talk about which of the things they have where they live or in the place they are studying. As an optional follow-up, students could discuss which items they value most in a place to live.

As a further follow-up, or as an alternative during the matching phase, students spread cards a–j out face up on the table and shuffle and place cards 1–10 face down in a pile. Students take turns to pick up a card from the pile and read it aloud. The other students race to say the rest of the collocation or grab the card (depending on your class). The person who says/grabs it first wins the pair. The student with the most pairs at the end wins.

6B GRAMMAR: be/get used to

What are you used to?

Materials: One worksheet per pair, cut in half

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to have a mingle to practise using be/get used to. Give each student half a worksheet (ensuring there is an even distribution across the class). Explain that they need to talk to each other and discuss how used to each thing they are. Point out that there are two different worksheets, so sometimes they will be discussing the same items on their worksheet with another student and sometimes different ones. Write the following prompts on the board for students to use during the discussion:

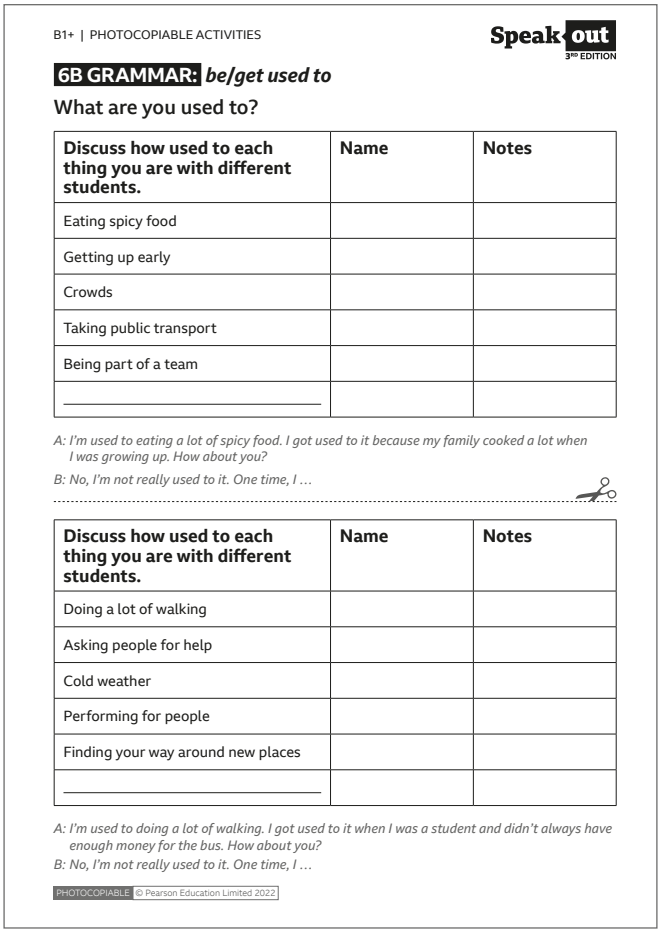

I'm (not) used to …

I'm getting used to …

I got used to … when …

I could never get used to …

Point out that there is a row on the worksheet for students to add their own idea for something that they're (not) used to or getting used to to talk about, and ask them to complete this before starting the class mingle. Encourage students to ask follow-up questions as they talk to their classmates to find out more information in their discussions. Circulate during the mingle, assisting as required. After the discussions, ask a few students to share something they had in common with a classmate in class feedback.

2 Are your results mostly As, Bs, Cs or Ds? Look at the key. Do you agree with what it says about you?

Your results

Mostly As:
You're a planner at heart and love being organised. Lists and calendars are your friends. By thinking ahead, you achieve a lot in life. When you do take risks, you have considered them carefully and you always have a Plan B.

Mostly Bs:
You're full of fun and like to live life moment by moment. 'Yes' is your middle name. You look for new experiences and if they involve a bit of risk, it actually gives you energy. You like a bit of danger!

Mostly Cs:
You enjoy relaxation and the finer things in life. You're not a big risk-taker, preferring the safety and comfort of home. Honestly, it all sounds like too much effort. If you're diving deep, it will be into conversation, not the ocean.

Mostly Ds:
You're creative and like to do your own thing. You're great at solving problems and not afraid of hard work. You like to explore, whether it's topics or places. With risk, your feelings change day to day.

6C HOW TO ... ask for and confirm information

Tour of the city

Materials: One worksheet per student

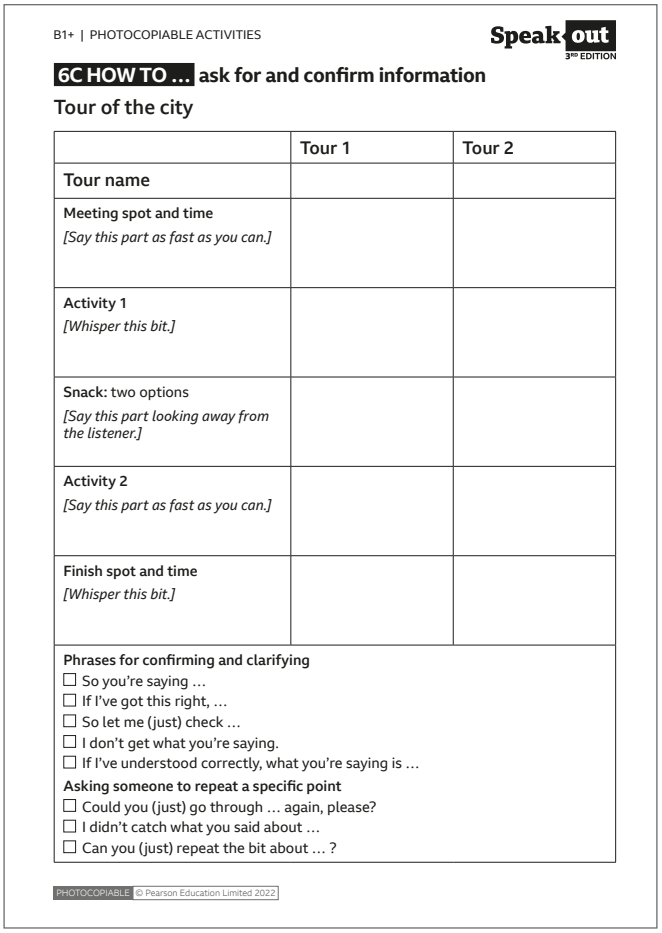

Time: 20–25 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise asking for and confirming information. Give each student a worksheet and ask them to imagine that a group of language students is visiting where they live or where they are from for a day. In pairs, they need to design a tour for them with fun and interesting things to do. Put students in pairs and give them ten minutes to design their tour, completing the information in the 'Tour 1' column on both of their worksheets.

When they have finished, reorganise students in new pairs. Explain that students need to take turns to describe their tour to their new partner without showing them their worksheet. The other student needs to listen and note the details in the 'Tour 2' column. However, when giving the information, students need to follow the instructions in brackets for each part (say it fast, whisper, etc.), so their partner has to ask them to repeat and clarify the information using the phrases on the worksheet. As the student listening uses each phrase, they tick it, as a way to try and use as many different phrases as possible.

Alternatively, students explain their tour normally, but every twenty to thirty seconds, you interrupt their explanation (by playing a few seconds of music, ringing a bell or calling out a phrase). At that point the listener should need to ask for repetition or clarification about something that has been said using one of the phrases on the bottom of the worksheet.

To finish, invite a few pairs to say which aspect of their discussion they found most challenging to ask about or confirm information for. If time allows, students could repeat the activity with a new partner.

7A GRAMMAR: reported speech

Who said what?

Materials: One card per student

Time: 25–30 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do a class mingle to practise reported speech. Give each student a card and tell them not to show it to anyone else. If you have a large class, some students can have duplicate cards. Explain that during the mingle, they will need to speak with other students from the class and do the task they have been given on their card. After the activity, students will then have to work in pairs to remember as much as they can about what people said using reported speech. Write the following reporting verbs on the board as prompts: agree, answer, complain, explain, promise, realise, reply, say and tell.

Give students time to think about what language they will use to complete the task on their card. Circulate while they are doing this, assisting as required. Note that students don't need to say exactly the same thing to everyone, as long as they complete the task on the card each time.

Conduct the class mingle. When students have finished, put them in pairs and give them a few minutes to write down as many things that people said as they can remember using reported speech, e.g. 'Maryam asked whether I came here often.' Note that if students don't know each other's names well, they could report back using someone, e.g. 'Someone complained about being very busy.'

In class feedback, pairs report the statements they remember. The pair with the most correctly reported statements wins.

7A VOCABULARY: reporting verbs; ways of speaking

Act it out

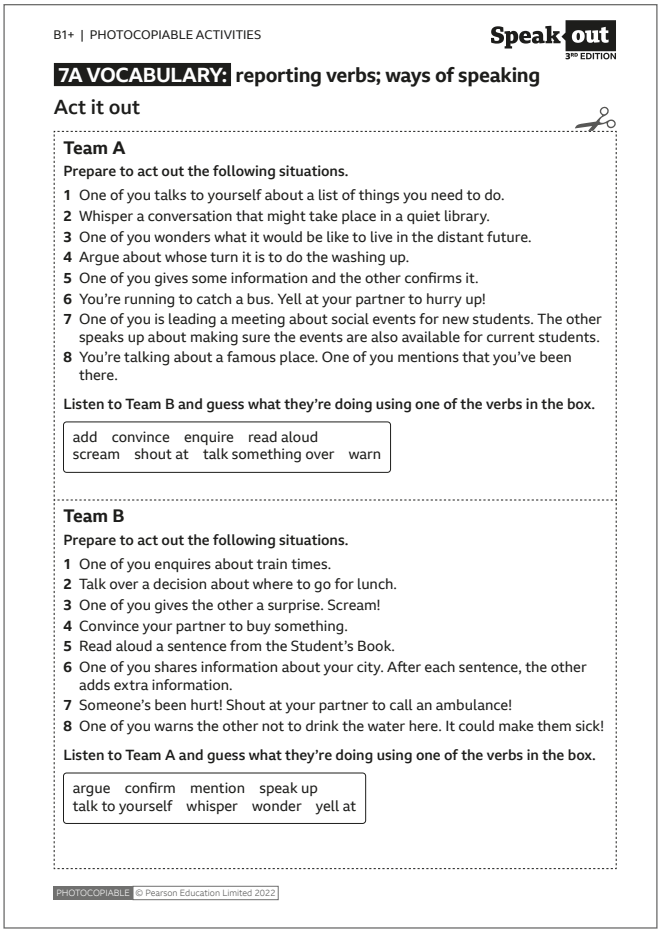

Materials: One worksheet per group of four, cut in half

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise reporting verbs and vocabulary for ways of speaking. Put students in groups of four (two pairs) and give each pair half a worksheet. Tell pairs not to show each other their information. Give them five to ten minutes to practise how they will act out each situation on their worksheet for the other pair. Note that each situation can be short, i.e. a few sentences, or even just one. Circulate, assisting with preparation as required. When they have finished, pairs take turns to act and guess their situations.

You could add a competitive element, where students get a point if they guess the situations correctly, and the pair with the most points wins.

To finish, a few students or pairs could act out one of their situations for the class to guess.

7B GRAMMAR: passives

Secret helper

Materials: One set of cards per pair

Time: 15–20 minutes

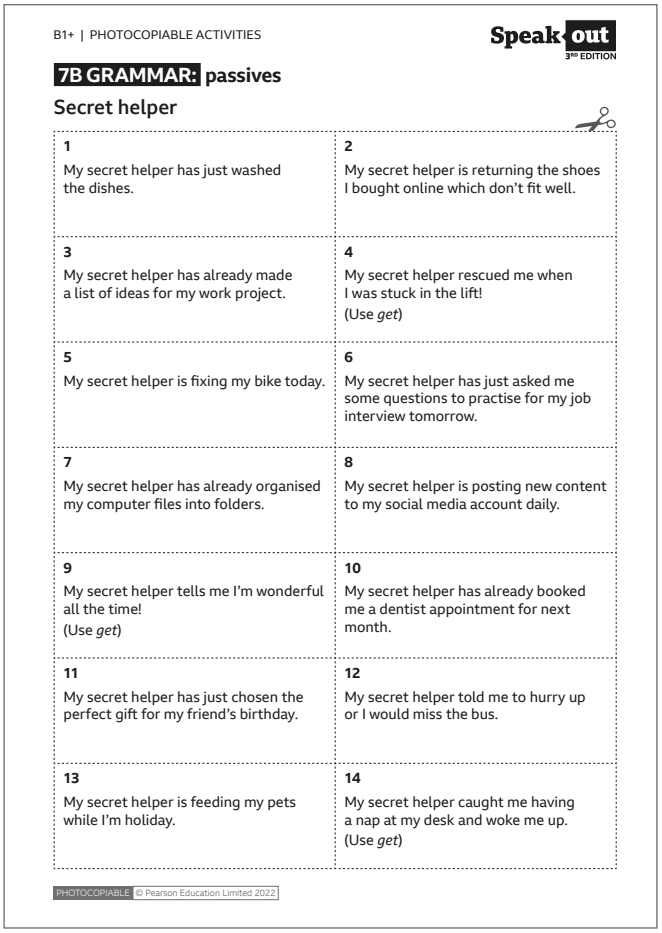

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise forming passives. Put students in pairs and give each pair a set of cards face down. Explain that in this game, they have a secret helper. When talking about everything that the secret helper is doing, they should focus on what has been done, not on who has done it, using a passive form. Students take turns to pick up a card and turn the sentence on it into a passive. Write an example not on the cards on the board, e.g. My secret helper has already finished my work report. and elicit the sentence 'My work report has already been finished.' If students form the passive sentence correctly, they keep the card. If they don't form the sentence correctly or accidentally say 'secret' or 'helper', then the other player keeps the card. Circulate during the game, assisting as necessary. The student with the most cards at the end of the game is the winner.

Alternatively (or with weaker classes) the game may be played in groups of four, divided into teams of two.

As an optional follow-up, each pair could make up three more passive sentences about things that have been done or are being done by the secret helper.

7C HOW TO … keep a conversation going

Ping-pong

Materials: One worksheet per pair

Time: 15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to play a game to practise keeping a conversation going. Ask students what they know about ping-pong / table tennis and point out that keeping a conversation going is like ping-pong, with one person saying something and the other person returning the 'ball' with another comment or question.

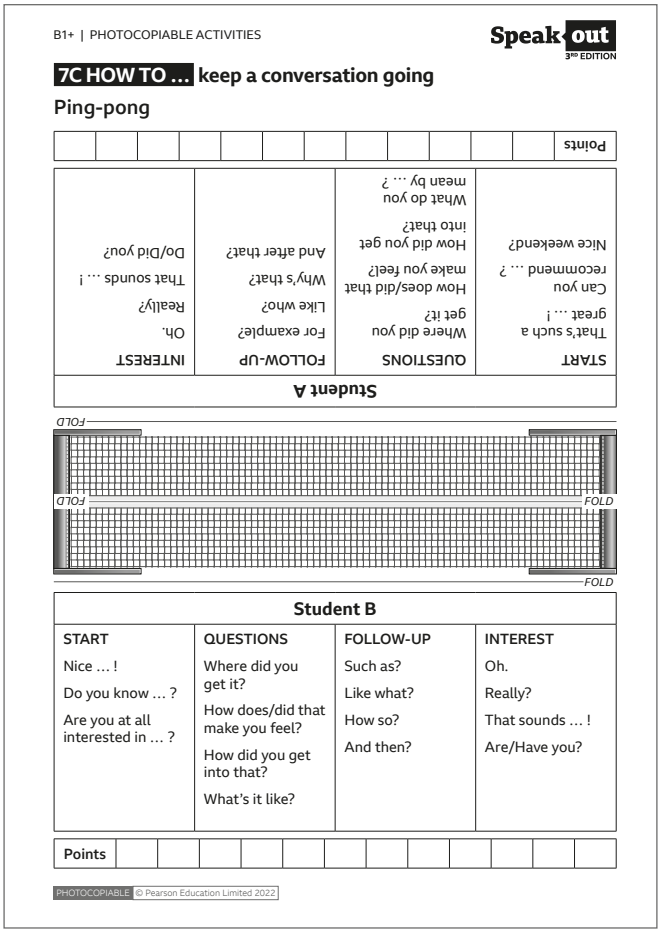

Put students in pairs and give each pair a worksheet. Demonstrate how to fold the worksheet along the lines indicated to form a ping-pong net between the two sides. Tell students that they will take turns to 'serve' by starting a conversation using one of the prompts on their side of the worksheet. The other person 'returns' by replying within three seconds. Students continue to reply to each other for as long as they can. Whoever is the last person to say something in the conversation without breaking the rhythm wins a point and records this on their worksheet, in the points table. The other student then begins a new conversation with a serve. Explain that the prompts on their side of the net are there to help, but students can also use their own ideas. Circulate as students play the game, assisting as necessary. After a minimum of three serves each, the student with the most points on their worksheet wins.

With weaker classes, the time to reply can be increased. For a longer activity, or for fast finishers, students could rotate the worksheet and play again with the other set of prompts.

Alternatively, pairs work together to create a conversation, scoring one point for every turn in the conversation until one of them hesitates. Then the next player serves, and they try to beat their own score.

POSSIBLE ANSWER:

A: That's such a great scarf!
B: Thanks!
A: Where did you get it?
B: I got it at the market across the road. It's got lots of great stuff.

A: Oh, that sounds delicious.
B: Yeah, it's so good. I love paella.
A: Do you?
B: Yeah, so many great flavours.

8A GRAMMAR: third conditional and should have

I might have, if …

Materials: One worksheet per student, cut along the line

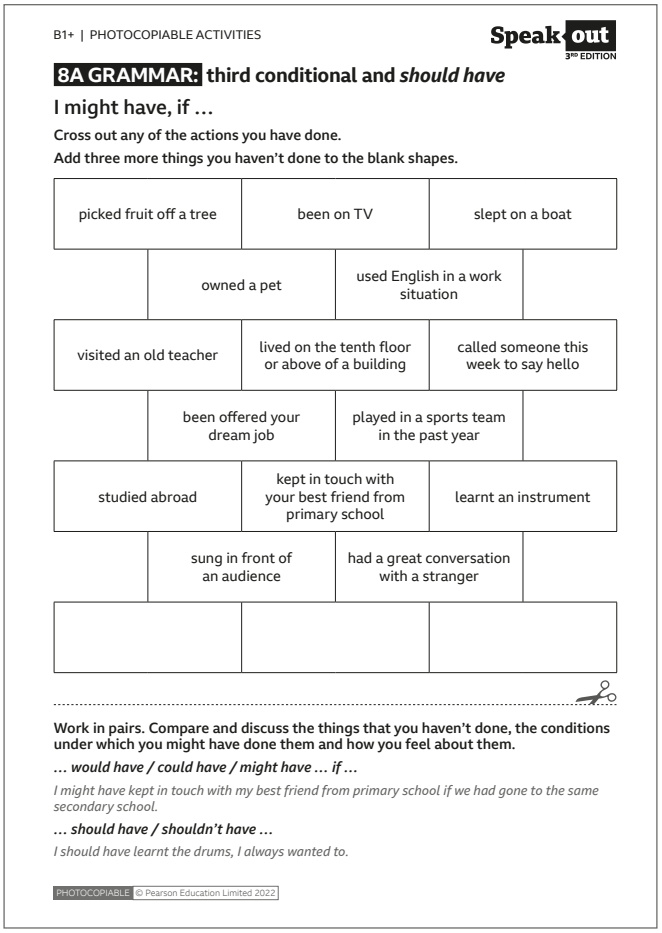

Time: 10–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise the third conditional and should have. Give each student the top section of the worksheet and go through the instructions, emphasising that they should cross out the things they have done (i.e. leaving the things that they haven't done visible). When students have done this, elicit some suggestions for the blank shapes, e.g. been to Australia, tried VR, got 100% in an exam, etc., then ask students to complete them.

Put students in pairs and give them the second part of the worksheet. Go through the instructions and examples, then circulate as students discuss their answers, monitoring accuracy of third conditionals and should have and assisting as required. Stronger students could be encouraged to include some negative structures in their discussions, e.g. 'I might have picked fruit off a tree if I hadn't grown up in the city.'

To finish, invite a few students to share some of their third conditional or should have sentences with the class.

As an optional follow-up, students could discuss the things on the worksheet that they have done, including third conditionals or should have to explain what they could have done differently, e.g. 'I studied in Brazil, but I should have learnt more Portuguese before I went. I shouldn't have stayed by myself. I might have had even more fun if I had stayed in a hostel with other students.'

8A VOCABULARY: phrases of advice

My younger self

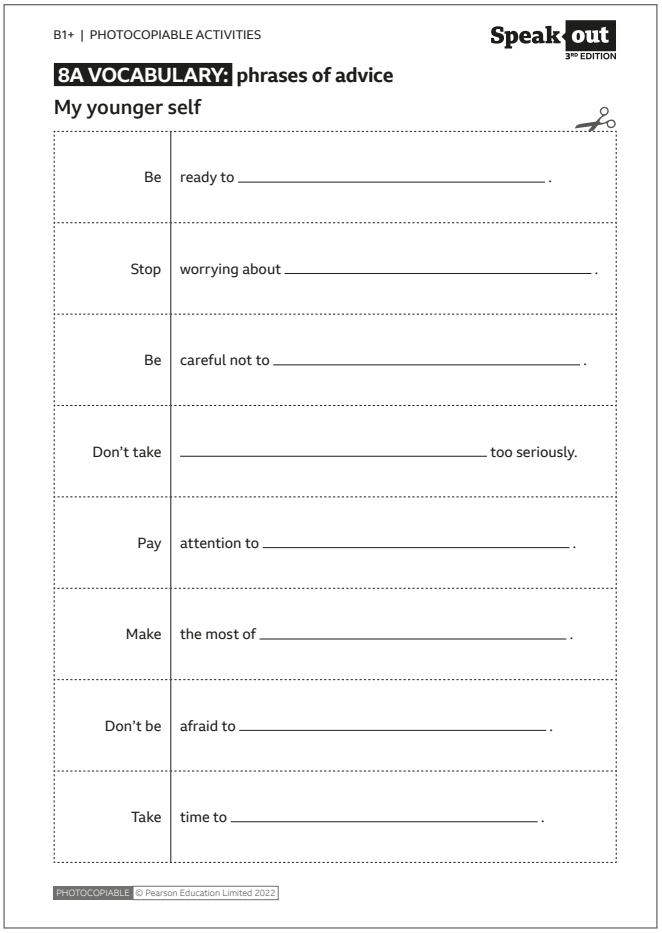

Materials: One worksheet per pair, cut into horizontal strips (do not cut the vertical line yet); scissors if available

Time: 15–20 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise phrases of advice. Put students in pairs and give each pair a set of cards. Tell students that they need to write advice for their younger self by discussing and completing the prompts on each card. They can choose any age that they feel is relevant, e.g. starting primary school, starting secondary school, etc. Remind them to pay attention to verb forms as they complete the sentences. When they have finished, they should cut, or tear neatly if scissors are not available, along the vertical line on each card. Put pairs together to form groups of four. Within their group, each pair then swaps their set of cards with the other pair. They then match the other pair's cards to form advice, then come together as a group of four to discuss any similarities between the sentences they wrote, and whether they agree with all the advice given.

To finish, invite each pair to choose and share their favourite piece of the other pair's advice with the class.

Alternatively, instead of matching the advice written by the other pair, students could use their own cards for a game of Pelmanism. Once the cards have been cut vertically, they are spread out face down. Students take turns to pick up two cards. If they're a match, they keep them. If not, the cards are turned face down again in the same position. The student with the most pairs at the end wins.

8B GRAMMAR: would

Talk for a minute

Materials: One set of topic cards per group of three, with the would / used to card cut separately and folded along the line indicated

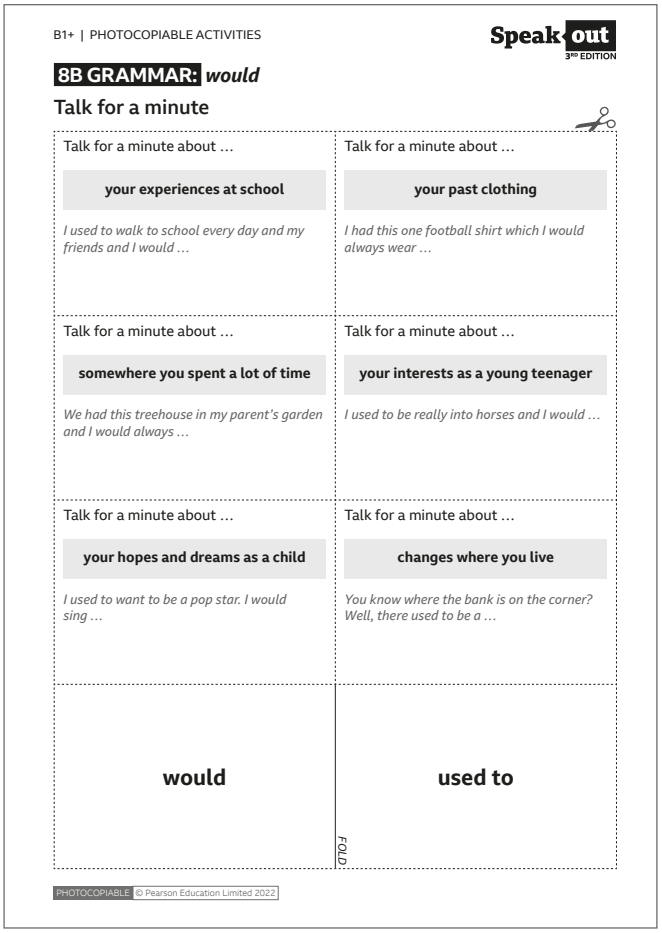

Time: 10–15 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise talking about the past using would, used to and the past simple. Put students in groups of three and explain that they will each take turns to talk for a minute about different topics related to the past. Hold up a folded would / used to card, showing how it has would on one side and used to on the other. Explain that when talking about the past, it's common to use these words in the same or consecutive sentences. Write an example on the board, e.g. When I was a kid, I used to bake things for my family, but I'd add different things from the cupboard, so they often used to taste really odd. My family would pretend they liked everything though. They used to be so nice about my 'experiments'!

Explain that while students are talking, they should use the would / used to card as a prompt. Each time they use one of the expressions, they turn it over to remind them to include the other one in their next phrase or sentence if possible. Demonstrate this using the example from the previous paragraph, or your own example. Point out though that correct grammar is more important than alternating would and used to, and remind students that they can't use would to talk about states. Give each group of three a set of topic cards and a would / used to card. Students take turns to choose and talk about a topic, timing each other as they speak. Students have two turns each and can repeat topics if they wish.

To add more challenge, students could aim to include a certain number of would and used to structures within their minute, e.g. three of each.

For an even more challenging alternative, give each group a set of topic cards in a face-down pile. Students take turns to pick up and read out the top card, then immediately speak about the topic.

8B VOCABULARY: learning; phrasal verbs

What inspires you?

Materials: One card per student

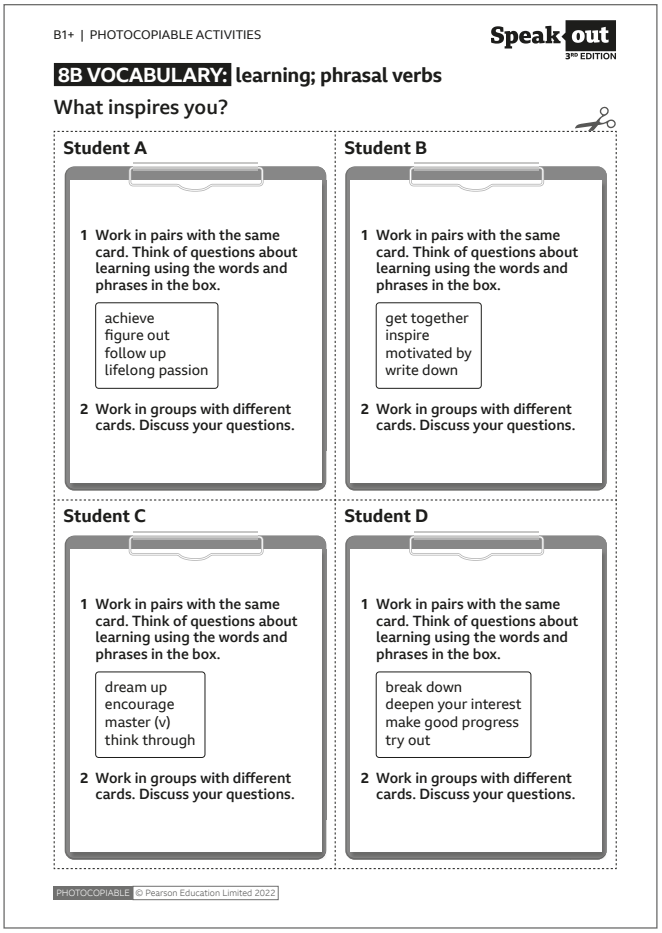

Time: 15–30 minutes

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise vocabulary related to learning and phrasal verbs. Give each student a card from the set, ensuring there is an even distribution of A–D cards in the class. Ask students to work with someone who has the same card as them. In pairs, they think of (and write down if they wish) questions for other students using the words and phrases on their card (four questions per card, though there may be some instances where they can include more than one of the words or phrases in the same question). Circulate while students do this, checking question forms and assisting as required.

Reorganise students in groups with different cards (i.e. A/B/C/D). Students take turns to share one of their questions for the group to discuss. Tell students that at the end you will invite one student from each group to summarise any common themes (i.e. ideas that are repeated) that come up in their discussion. With stronger classes, choose a student at random to report back. With weaker classes, students could decide in advance who is going to give this feedback.

If time is short, each student could share all of their questions first, with the group choosing just one of them to discuss.

Finish by asking the reporter from each group to share any common themes in their discussion in class feedback.

8C HOW TO … give a presentation

Let's revise

Materials: One set of cards per group of three

Time: 15–30 minutes

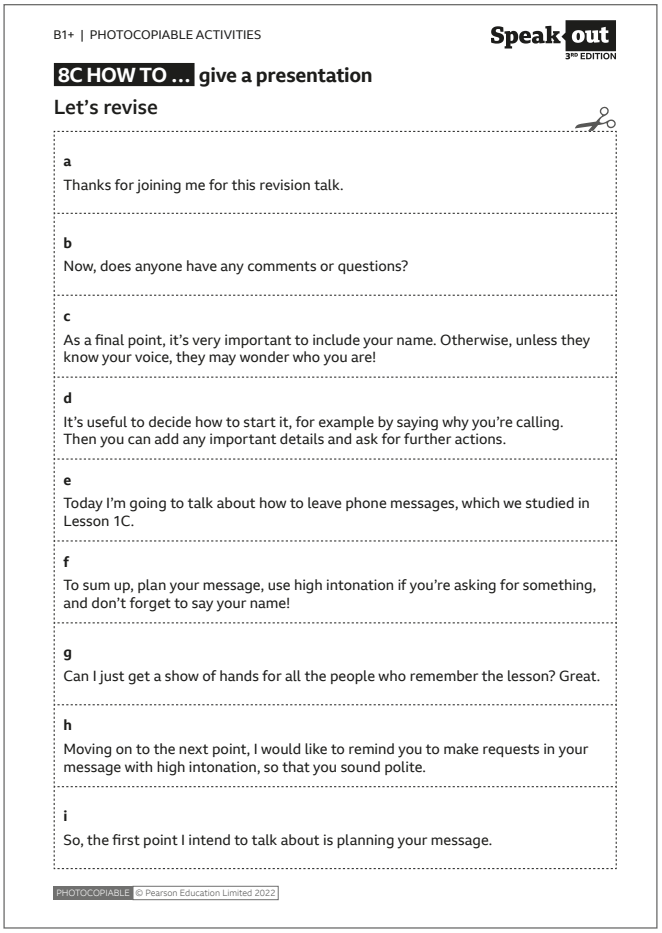

Tell students that they are going to do an activity to practise giving presentations that will also give them an opportunity to revise material from the course. Put students in groups of three and give each group a set of cards. Tell students that the cards contain sentences from a student's revision presentation about one of the other How to … lessons from the course. Ask groups to put the presentation in the correct order, then check answers as a class.

As a follow-up, students work individually or in their groups to prepare their own similar revision talk about one of the lessons from the book. Let them choose or allocate lessons from the course as necessary. (Note that the How to … lessons are especially well-suited for this purpose.) Students then present their talks to a group, or the class.

Alternatively, after ordering the revision talk, give students the choice to present on any topic of their choice.

In weaker classes, students could present their talk to a partner, then change partners and present it again to increase confidence and fluency.

ANSWERS:
The correct order is a, e, g, i, d, h, c, f, b.

8C HOW TO … give a presentation

Let's revise

a
Thanks for joining me for this revision talk.

b
Now, does anyone have any comments or questions?

c
As a final point, it's very important to include your name. Otherwise, unless they know your voice, they may wonder who you are!

d
It's useful to decide how to start it, for example by saying why you're calling. Then you can add any important details and ask for further actions.

e
Today I'm going to talk about how to leave phone messages, which we studied in Lesson 1C.

f
To sum up, plan your message, use high intonation if you're asking for something, and don't forget to say your name!

g
Can I just get a show of hands for all the people who remember the lesson? Great.

h
Moving on to the next point, I would like to remind you to make requests in your message with high intonation, so that you sound polite.

i
So, the first point I intend to talk about is planning your message.
