READING

4 Read an article about different types of consumers. Match the statements (a–h) with the types of consumers (1–3) they are connected to.

1 Need-based customer: _____
2 Agreeable consumer: _____
3 Bargain hunter: _____

a These people are more likely to show brand loyalty.
b These people always think about the future when they are shopping.
c These people only buy things that are essential.
d These people don't always get pleasure from what they buy.
e These people don't mind buying things which they don't need.
f These people are less interested in shopping than other consumers.
g These people focus on getting the best value for money.
h These people buy things to make other people happy.

/8

What sort of consumer are you?

There are different types of consumer. In this article, we look at three of them. Which type are you?

Need-based customer

Are you the sort of person who only buys things when you need them? Are you able to resist making purchases that aren't really necessary? If so, then you're a need-based customer. You're a sensible person who thinks carefully before making decisions and spending your money. You're not as attracted to the experience of shopping as other types of consumers. When you decide to buy something, you don't need any help choosing the product. You go straight to the right section of the shop because you already know exactly what you're going to buy. You aren't easily distracted by other products or special offers, either. Shop assistants are wasting their time if they try to sell you something more expensive. However, you can be persuaded to change brands if the price and the quality seem reasonable.

Agreeable consumer

If you don't like to upset anyone, including sales assistants, then you're an agreeable consumer. You're the sort of person who buys something you don't need because you're not comfortable saying no. Even if you're rushing, you'll listen to the sales assistant with a pleasant smile. However, that doesn't mean every purchase makes you happy. What you really want is to make the world a better place, and you want to buy goods that reflect that. Because of that, you'd rather spend your money on organic food and brands that don't exploit their workers. When you know you can trust a company, you'll be a loyal client. For that reason, you're the sort of consumer salespeople love. If they can persuade you that profits are less important than people to them, you'll keep on buying their products.

Bargain hunter

Bargain hunters love shopping, but only if the price is right. You know where to get the cheapest groceries and you only buy your clothes in the sales. In fact, you're the sort of person who will sleep outside a shop with a sale so as to be the first in the queue in the morning. You don't show as much brand loyalty as other types of consumer and you'll happily change brands if you can get a better deal. However, you love loyalty cards, which give you discounts on the things you like, and you've probably got a wallet full of them. You're also different from need-based customers because you're happy to buy things that aren't essential, as long as they seem like a bargain. Not only that, but you're the sort of person who will buy large quantities of a product. That's because you're forever thinking about making savings in the long-term.

5 Read the article again. Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

1 Need-based customers find it difficult to make good decisions. T / F
2 Need-based customers find it hard to locate the products they want in a shop. T / F
3 Need-based customers are unlikely to be influenced by sales assistants' advice. T / F
4 Agreeable consumers are not patient even when they are in a hurry. T / F
5 Agreeable consumers care a lot about other people's happiness. T / F
6 Bargain hunters are prepared to wait a long time for the right product. T / F
7 Bargain hunters tend to choose the same brands every time they shop. T / F

Survival Stories: Poon Lim

Poon Lim was born in China and worked on a British ship. He had always wanted to sail a boat, but he was only allowed to look after the officers. One day in 1942, his ship was crossing the Atlantic Ocean from South Africa to Suriname in South America. When they were 750 miles from their destination, disaster struck. Lim was going to give the officers their morning tea, when there was a sudden, violent movement of the ship. With water pouring in everywhere, the crew were told to try and escape.

Lim just had time to jump into the sea before the ship disappeared under the water. He was not a strong swimmer, but he managed to hold onto a piece of the ship. He called out for his crewmates, but no one responded. After floating in the water for some time, Lim came across one of the ship's life rafts – a simple, flat boat used in emergencies. Pulling himself onto it, he immediately fell asleep, exhausted from the day's events.

When Lim woke up, everything was unfamiliar until he remembered where he was. The life raft was small and Lim was afraid of falling into the sea. Thinking on his feet, he tied himself to the life raft with some rope. Feeling safer, Lim looked around for supplies. There was a container of drinking water, chocolate, and some tinned food, which kept him alive for some time. When the supplies eventually ran out, he used some cloth to catch rainwater for drinking. He also made a fishing line to catch fish for food.

During his time at sea, Lim had to get used to tough conditions. One of the biggest challenges was protecting himself from the weather. Conditions could change quickly so he made a basic shelter to protect him in storms and stop him getting so wet. There was also the danger of being attacked by sharks. Once, when he was hungry, he risked catching one, but it tried to bite him. Fortunately, Lim managed to defend himself by hitting it with the water container.

At the beginning, Lim counted the days, but, after a while, he started counting full moons instead. However, after 133 days on the life raft, he finally spotted land. Not long after that, he was rescued by fishermen near the coast of Brazil. He was badly sunburnt and had lost weight, but he was able to walk. After a few weeks in hospital, he was taken to Britain where he was awarded a medal by King George VI. Until this day, he holds the record for the longest time at sea on a life raft.

7 Read the story again. Choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D).

1 When the accident happened, Lim was
A an officer on a British ship.
B taking a ship from China to Britain.
C serving the officers on the ship.
D trying to escape from the ship.

2 What happened when the ship sank?
A Lim was rescued by his crewmates.
B Lim found something to help him float.
C Lim was able to swim to safety.
D Lim made a life raft from pieces of the ship.

3 What does the writer say in the third paragraph?
A Lim didn't know where he was at first.
B Lim tied a rope around his feet.
C Lim found enough food for the journey.
D Lim kept falling into the sea.

4 What were the main difficulties on the life raft?
A He had nothing to stop him getting wet.
B He was unable to prevent a shark attack.
C There was no chance of finding more food.
D There was little protection from the weather.

5 When Lim reached Brazil, he
A was no longer able to walk.
B had few serious injuries.
C knew how long he had been at sea.
D was awarded a medal by the King.
