READING

4 Read the text about different types of consumers. Match the statements (A–G) with the type of consumers (1–3). The first one has been done for you.

1 Loyal customer: _____

2 Impulse shopper: A

3 Wandering consumer: _____

A ~~These people don't always buy the same brand of product.~~

B These people are likely to buy something if the price is reduced.

C These people tend to purchase the same brand all the time.

D These people sometimes plan to buy nothing.

E These people may help sell the product by telling other people about it.

F These people like to be treated well by the staff in shops.

G These people are sometimes taken advantage of by companies.

What sort of consumer are you?

In this article, we look at three different types of consumers.
Which type are you?

LOYAL CUSTOMER

If you're used to buying the same products, you're probably a loyal customer. You don't think twice before making a purchase as you already know what you're going to buy. You don't even mind paying more to get exactly what you want. Not only that, you're likely to provide free advertising because you'll probably recommend the product to your friends and family. You might think it's easy for businesses to keep these customers loyal, but the opposite is true. If loyal customers change brand, it's tough to persuade them to return which is why shops and services have loyalty cards and offer discounts to their regular customers.

IMPULSE SHOPPER

Unlike loyal customers, impulse shoppers don't show brand loyalty and are far more likely to buy things which they hadn't planned to purchase. They'll go into a supermarket for milk and come out with a car cleaning kit just because it's on offer! For an impulse shopper, the experience of buying something is often more important than the product itself. Surveys have shown that impulse shoppers are usually in a much better mood after making a purchase. However, they do need to be careful that shops don't exploit their weakness. If products are made attractive, even if they're useless, the impulse shopper will find it hard to resist buying them.

WANDERING CONSUMER

Are you someone who likes to walk slowly around the shops looking at the goods on offer? If so, then you're probably a wandering consumer. You have some things in common with impulse shoppers because sometimes you don't know what you're going to buy. In fact, you might have no intention of buying anything at all! What you really like is checking the quality of the products or looking out for a good deal. It's the experience of being in a shop rather than making a purchase that wandering consumers enjoy. That's why it's important for businesses to make the shopping experience as attractive as possible. They play music and have giant video screens so as to encourage people like you into their shops. Once the wandering consumer is inside, sales assistants will need to be pleasant and convincing in order to make a sale.

5 Read the text again. Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

0 Loyal customers find it hard to choose things to buy. _F_

1 Loyal customers are prepared to pay a higher price for the right goods. ___

2 Companies have to do very little to keep loyal customers. ___

3 For some impulse shoppers, the experience is not as important as the product. ___

4 Impulse shoppers may be influenced by the way a product looks. ___

5 Wandering consumers and impulse shoppers have a similar attitude to shopping. ___

6 Wandering consumers enjoy the experience of buying something more than anything else. ___

Survival stories: Helen Klaben

Helen Klaben was 21 when she left home in search of adventure. Originally from New York, Klaben went to Fairbanks, which is so far north that the city has 24 hours of daylight in summer. After several months there, Helen decided it was time to see other places. She planned to go to San Francisco where she could get an international flight. However, to get there, she had to get to a small city called Fort St. John in Canada.

The easiest way to get to there was by plane. The road journey would have been long and slow because of the snow. Then Helen met a man called Ralph Flores who was an aeroplane mechanic. He offered to take her to Fort St. John if she shared the costs with him. Helen agreed and they set off on a journey taking them over hundreds of miles of forests and mountains. Unfortunately, Flores had no experience of flying in bad weather.

It was a long flight so they broke the journey in a town called Whitehorse. However, the weather was so bad, they ended up spending three days there. Despite the risk, Flores finally took off for Fort St. John. After a while, though, the conditions got worse and he couldn't see where he was going. Flores decided to fly the plane lower so as to find a road to follow. That's when one of the wings hit a tree. Flores warned Klaben they were going to crash just before they came down in a forest.

Luckily, both Klaben and Flores survived, although they both had broken bones. Unable to move, they found themselves in the middle of nowhere with temperatures as low as -40°. If that wasn't bad enough, they had little food and no survival equipment apart from a knife and matches. Thinking on their feet, they made a shelter to protect them from the cold. Their food lasted for ten days, but, after that, they only had melted snow water. To make themselves feel better, they pretended the water was soup.

Finally, after more than five weeks, Flores was able to move and left Klaben alone to try and get help. He found a suitable spot to write the letters S.O.S. in the snow and, fortunately, a passing aeroplane saw it. The pilot, Chuck Hamilton, also located the crash site thanks to a fire that Klaben had made. He came back the next day and helped the pair get to safety. Klaben later wrote about her experience in a book called, 'Hey, I'm alive!'.
