4 why some people can't concentrate when they're using the internet ___
5 why people with memory problems should avoid the internet ___

/5

Has the internet really changed the way we think?
By Cora Leonard

When the internet first appeared, we were warned it would change the way we think. For example, when I was a teenager, my mum would only let me use it for thirty minutes a day. She was convinced that it would make me less intelligent. Now I'm an adult, I use it practically all day, but my brain seems to be working fairly normally! So, has the internet really changed the way we think?

The internet gives us access to more knowledge than ever before. In less than a second, you can get information from almost a trillion web pages. The question is, how much of it stays in your memory when you've turned off the computer? For example, my boss recently asked me to research football facts and figures for an article. After scrolling through pages for hours, I'd found plenty of information, but I couldn't remember any of it! It turns out I'm not alone, though, because research has shown that the internet can reduce the brain's ability to store new information.

I knew I was in trouble when my boss asked me for those facts and figures. I hadn't written anything down, so I apologised and promised to do better next time. However, some people wouldn't have been so honest. That's because some internet users don't even know what they've learnt from it. In one experiment, people were allowed to use the internet to answer questions before being asked how they had answered them. Amazingly, most believed they'd worked out the answers with their own knowledge. They couldn't tell the difference between information from their brains and information from the internet.

Anyone using the internet knows it can be difficult to avoid distractions like pop-ups. You might be trying to prepare a report for work, but it's hard to resist clicking a link to see your favourite popstar. It's not surprising, then, that internet users find it harder to focus on new information. In a recent survey, 85 percent of teachers said the internet was having a negative effect on their students' ability to pay attention. The problem is that unless we're paying attention, we won't learn anything new.

It seems that the internet is changing the way we manage new information. Some people are particularly worried about its effect on children and their ability to think for themselves. However, others point out that some people might actually benefit from using the internet. For example, it can help older people with memory problems by deepening their interest in the world around them. It should also be pointed out that most research only looks at short-term effects. Until we know the long-term effects, we probably shouldn't take these worries too seriously.

5 Read the article again. Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

1 The writer spends most of the day online. T / F
2 She thinks the internet has made her less intelligent. T / F
3 She forgot most of the information about football that she got from websites. T / F
4 She doesn't think anyone else has the same memory problems as her. T / F
5 She was able to give notes with facts and figures to her boss. T / F
6 In an experiment, some internet users were wrong about how they had answered questions. T / F
7 The writer doesn't think it is difficult to avoid clicking links. T / F
8 The majority of teachers think their students have trouble paying attention. T / F
9 The internet can be helpful to people who have difficulty remembering things. T / F
10 We should be worried about how the internet affects people over long periods of time. T / F

/10

6 Read an article in which people talk about things that have gone wrong for them. Match the people (1–5) with the things they might say (A–E).

1 Pablo: ___
2 Anuk: ___
3 Max: ___
4 Hannah: ___
5 Bilal: ___

A If I'd explained something properly, I wouldn't have had to change my plans.
B I should have taken more care with my belongings.
C I should have read something more carefully.
D I'd have got into trouble at work if I hadn't solved this problem.
E If I'd been more careful, I wouldn't have broken something.

/5

When things go wrong …
Five readers tell us about things that have gone wrong for them.

Pablo
Once I forgot to save an important document. It was a report which I'd been asked to prepare by my manager. I looked through my folders, but I couldn't find it anywhere. I had a feeling of panic because I had to hand it in that day. What I didn't know is that all our files are backed up online. When I mentioned it to a colleague, she quickly figured out where it was. If I hadn't asked her, I wouldn't have known what to do.

Anuk
I was on a coach from Marseille to London, which is a long way. When we stopped at a café for a break, I went to use the bathroom. We'd been back on the coach for a while when I realised I didn't have my bag. I'd left it in the bathroom and my passport was in it. I told the driver, who agreed to go back, but some passengers were yelling at me for making us late. If we hadn't gone back, though, we'd have had problems at the border and we'd have been even later.

Max
Golf is a lifelong passion of mine and I really wanted my girlfriend to try it out. It took a while, but I finally convinced her to come to my golf club. Unfortunately, she turned up wearing jeans and a T-shirt, and they wouldn't let her in. They've got strict rules and you have to wear the right type of clothes. I should have mentioned it to her before. I felt guilty, but she told me to stop worrying about it. We went for a walk instead, which probably worked out better.

Hannah
I was taking the cake to my friend's wedding when I dropped it. It was my own fault because I was carrying too many things. It smashed to pieces so there was no way we could use it. I didn't say anything to my friend while I worked out what to do. Before long though, she asked where it was. I whispered to her what had happened, expecting her to shout at me. Instead, she smiled and told me not to worry. If she hadn't been so nice, I think I'd have run away!

Bilal
I was making good progress at school and I just had to hand in my final project. I'd made a big effort so I thought I'd achieve a good grade. Then, right at the last moment, I realised I'd misunderstood the task. I hadn't paid enough attention to the question. I thought it through, but I didn't have time to write it again. I gave it to the teacher and told him what had happened. I didn't get the grade I'd hoped for, but I still managed to pass the course.

7 Read the article again. Choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D).

1 Pablo
A hadn't wanted to prepare a report for his manager.
B managed to find the report in one of his folders.
C didn't know that his file had been saved on the internet.
D would have figured out where the file was eventually.

2 Anuk
A didn't know Marseille was a long way from London.
B wasn't sure where she had left her passport.
C was too afraid to tell the driver what had happened.
D was shouted at by the other people on the coach.

3 Max
A wasn't convinced that his girlfriend would like golf.
B had encouraged his girlfriend to play golf with him.
C was disappointed that they couldn't play golf.
D had mentioned the golf club's rules to his girlfriend.

4 Hannah
A quietly explained to her friend what had happened.
B told her friend about the cake as soon as she could.
C expected her friend not to worry about the cake.
D decided it was best to run away from the wedding.

5 Bilal
A couldn't figure out what to do about his problem.
B had been convinced his project would be successful.
C had taken time to read the question for his project.
D is disappointed that he was unable to pass the course.
