2 how many people we are normally in contact with ___
3 how the length of our communication has changed ___
4 why it is better to send more direct messages ___
5 why we should be careful about using social media ___

/5

Has the internet improved communication?
By Jaydon Travis

When I was a teenager, the internet was used by few people and social media didn't exist. If we wanted to get in touch with our friends, we had to call them or write a letter. When my best friend moved abroad, we kept in touch by writing letters. It would usually take about a month to get a reply! Nowadays, it wouldn't take more than a few seconds to send and receive a message. The internet allows us to communicate faster, but has it improved communication in any other ways?

I'm connected to more than 800 people on one social media account and I'm always being invited to connect with new people. However, when I scroll through their profiles, I recognise hardly any of them. That's not surprising, though, because most of us only communicate with about 150 people in our social networks. Interestingly, we have a similar sized network in our normal lives. Social media lets us connect with more people, but we don't have the time or ability to communicate with them all.

The letters to my friend were seven or eight pages long. Because it took so long to exchange letters, we usually had a lot to say. Nowadays, we'd be more likely to send a short message like 'What's up?' or 'You good?'. Most of the time, we're typing our messages while doing other things, like working or sitting on the bus. Sometimes we're even communicating with several people at the same time. We need to ask ourselves whether the quality of our communication has been improved? Some people would argue that it hasn't.

Another important difference between online and 'traditional' communication is the type of response we get. In a normal conversation, we try to be polite in order to avoid creating negative thoughts and feelings. However, disagreeing on social media tends to be more direct, perhaps just a 'sad face' emoji. Social networks even encourage us to give these quick responses. However, if people receive negative feedback like this too often, it can lead to depression or the feeling of not being accepted. More and more evidence suggests that this is a growing problem among younger social media users.

Thanks to the internet, global communication has become faster and easier than ever. However, we should ask ourselves whether the quality of the communication has improved. Although social media offers us the chance to belong to huge networks of people, our brains aren't able to deal with this. At the same time, the language we use and the responses we give can be harmful, especially to the younger generation. The internet provides powerful tools for communication, but we need to become more aware of the dangers and use it with care.

5 Read the article again. Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

1 Social media hadn't been invented when the writer was a teenager. T / F
2 Before the internet existed, he couldn't contact a friend who lived abroad. T / F
3 He is familiar with most of the people in his social network. T / F
4 We have difficulty maintaining relationships with very large groups of people. T / F
5 The writer found it difficult to write long letters to his friend. T / F
6 People pay less attention to the task of writing messages nowadays. T / F
7 We tend to be less direct in conversation than we are in social media. T / F
8 The writer doesn't think social media has had a negative effect on some people's mental health. T / F
9 He doubts that social media has improved the quality of communication. T / F
10 He thinks most people are aware of the risks of using social media. T / F

When things go wrong …

Five readers tell us about things that have gone wrong for them.

Kat
When I got to the examination hall, I knew something was wrong. All the lights were off and there was no one around. I hadn't written down the exam times because I'd been in a hurry in the last class, so I went off to check with my teacher. That's when he told me that I'd missed it by a day. I felt so stupid. If I'd taken the time to write the times down, this wouldn't have happened. Luckily, he said I could take the exam later in the year.

Shahir
This happened when my friends were organising a birthday party for our friend Harry. If they'd told me it was a surprise, I wouldn't have said anything. When I mentioned it to Harry, though, he looked really confused. We figured out that it was supposed to be a surprise. We talked it through and he said he'd pretend not to know anything. When he arrived at the party, he acted surprised and no one found out. I felt terrible for ruining it, but Harry had a good time anyway.

Carmel
I'd planned to visit a friend who lives in Girona. I hadn't been there before so I was really excited. When I found some cheap flights online, I booked them straightaway. I only realised something was wrong when the plane landed. The captain said, 'Welcome to Italy,' and there were Italian flags at the airport. It turned out I'd taken a flight to Genoa in Italy instead of Girona in Spain! There were no flights to Girona from there so I stayed and made the most of it.

Oliver
I've always been careful not to open unusual emails at work because we're forever being warned not to. However, this one looked genuine so I just opened it and clicked on the link to download the attached file. Unfortunately, it contained a virus which got into all the computers in the office. It was a nightmare! When I admitted what had happened, my boss started yelling at me. I can understand why he was upset, but I wouldn't have opened the email if I'd known what it was.

Rosa
Once a year, we have a social event for the people at work. It was my turn to organise it so I booked a lively restaurant which does great barbecued food. When we sat down, I noticed a few of my colleagues whispering to each other. I asked them what the matter was. They told me that they were vegetarians, but almost everything on the menu was meat! I thought they'd be annoyed, but they told me to stop worrying. Apparently, it happens to them all the time.

7 Read the article again. Choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D).

1 Kat
A wasn't able to find the examination hall.
B didn't know who to speak to about her exam.
C could have avoided getting the time wrong.
D had written the time exam times down in class.

2 Shahir
A had been asked to organise a party for Harry.
B realised what he'd done after speaking to Harry.
C pretended he didn't know about Harry's party.
D knew that Harry wasn't expecting a party.

3 Carmel
A took some time before booking the flights online.
B realised during the flight that something was wrong.
C was able to book another flight back to Girona.
D decided to take advantage of the situation.

4 Oliver
A was deceived by the appearance of an email.
B didn't know how to download a file from the internet.
C stopped the virus affecting the other computers.
D is pleased that his boss didn't get angry with him.

5 Rosa
A didn't want to organise the meal for her colleagues.
B was annoyed that some colleagues wouldn't eat meat.
C didn't know why some colleagues were talking quietly.
D wasn't able to stop worrying about her colleagues.
