4 Why people with memory problems should avoid the internet. ___

___ / 4

Has the internet really changed the way we think?

By Cora Leonard

When the internet first appeared, we were warned it would change the way we think. For example, when I was a teenager, my mum would only let me use it for thirty minutes a day. She was convinced that it would make me less intelligent. Now I'm an adult, I use it practically all day, but my brain seems to be working fairly normally! So, has the internet really changed the way we think?

The internet gives us access to more knowledge than ever before and in seconds. The question is, how much of it stays in your memory when you've turned off the computer? My boss recently asked me to research football facts and figures for an article. After scrolling through pages for hours, I'd found plenty of information, but I couldn't remember any of it! It turns out I'm not alone, though, because research has shown that the internet can reduce the brain's ability to store new information.

I knew I was in trouble when my boss asked me for those facts and figures as I hadn't written anything down. However, some internet users don't even know what they've learnt from the internet. In one experiment, people were allowed to use it to answer questions before being asked how they'd answered them. Amazingly, most believed they'd worked out the answers with their own knowledge. They couldn't tell the difference between information from their brains and from the internet.

© 2023 Pearson PHOTOCOPIABLE

Anyone using the internet knows it can be difficult to avoid distractions like pop-ups. It's not surprising, then, that internet users find it harder to focus on new information. In a recent survey, 85 percent of teachers said the internet was having a negative effect on their students' ability to pay attention. The problem is that unless we're paying attention, we won't learn anything new.

It seems that the internet IS changing the way we manage new information. Some people are worried about its effect on children's ability to think for themselves. However, others point out that some people might actually benefit from using the internet. For example, it can help older people with memory problems by deepening their interest in the world around them. It should also be pointed out that most research only looks at short- term effects. Until we know the long-term effects, we probably shouldn't take these worries too seriously.

5 Read the text again. Are the statements True (T) or False (F)?

0 She thinks the internet has made her less intelligent. _F_

1 She doesn't think anyone else has the same memory problems as her. ___

2 In an experiment, some internet users were wrong about how they had answered questions. ___

3 The majority of teachers think their students have trouble paying attention. ___

4 We should be worried about how the internet affects people over long periods of time. ___

When things go wrong …

Five readers tell us about things that have gone wrong for them.

PABLO

Once I forgot to save a report which I'd been asked to prepare by my manager. I looked through my folders, but I couldn't find it anywhere. I had a feeling of panic because I had to hand it in that day. What I didn't know is that all our files are backed up online. When I mentioned it to a colleague, she quickly figured out where it was.

ANUK

I was on a coach from Marseille to London, which is a long way. When we stopped at a café for a break, I went to use the bathroom. We'd been back on the coach for a while when I realised that I'd left my bag in the bathroom and my passport was in it. I told the driver, who agreed to go back, but some passengers were yelling at me for making us late. If we hadn't gone back, though, we'd have had problems at the border and we'd have been even later.

MAX

Golf is a lifelong passion of mine and I really wanted my girlfriend to try it out. It took a while, but I finally convinced her to come to my golf club. Unfortunately, she turned up wearing jeans and a T-shirt, and they wouldn't let her in as they've got strict rules about clothing. I should have mentioned this to her before. I felt guilty, but she told me to stop worrying about it. We went for a walk instead, which probably worked out better.

HANNAH

I was taking the cake to my friend's wedding when I dropped it. It was my own fault because I was carrying too many things. It smashed to pieces so there was no way we could use it. I didn't say anything to my friend while I worked out what to do. Before long though, she asked where it was. I whispered to her what had happened, expecting her to shout at me. Instead, she smiled and told me not to worry. If she hadn't been so nice, I think I'd have run away!

BILAL

I was making good progress at school and I just had to hand in my final project. I'd made a big effort so I thought I'd achieve a good grade. Then, right at the last moment, I realised I'd misunderstood the task. I hadn't paid enough attention to the question. I thought it through, but I didn't have time to write it again. I gave it to the teacher and told him what had happened. I didn't get the grade I'd hoped for, but I still managed to pass the course.
