The Cardiff Giant

In 1867, George Hull came up with a scheme to convince people that giants had once walked the earth. He'd had an argument with a group of people who believed that giants once existed and intended to show them, and everyone else, how easily people could be deceived. His plan was to create a fake giant which had been turned into stone.

Hull started by buying a large piece of soft stone, which he transported to Chicago. Then he employed sculptors to create a three-metre giant man from it, making the sculptors promise to keep it a secret. They used chemicals to make the giant look old and made small holes in it to make the 'skin' look more natural. When finally ready, Hull arranged for the giant to be buried on the farm of his cousin, William Newell.

The giant remained underground for a year before Newell hired two men to dig a well in the same place. The two men had no idea about Hull and Newell's scheme so they were amazed to discover the giant. The announcement of the discovery was made in local newspapers and people were soon rushing to the farm to see it. Newell, who was happy to live the lie, put up a tent to protect the giant. He charged visitors fifty cents to see the dramatic discovery and shared the profits with Hull.

While many people were deceived by Hull's hoax, others doubted that the Cardiff Giant was genuine. Perhaps realising that the truth was going to come out, Hull sold his share of the giant for $30,000.

The circus owner P.T. Barnum had wanted to buy the giant and when the owners refused to sell it to him, he created his own fake giant. Barnum then told everyone that Hull's giant was the fake and charged people to see his 'real' giant!

Some people continued to believe the story of the Cardiff Giant until 1870 when the sculptors decided to come clean. Hull then also decided to break his silence and spoke publicly about his dishonest scheme. When the truth came out, interest in the giant disappeared and its owners stopped displaying it. In 1947, the Cardiff Giant was eventually sold to the Farmers' Museum in Cooperstown, New York, where it attracts visitors once again.
