WHY NOT TRY… CARIBBEAN FOOD?

I've lived in London all my life, but my parents were both born in the Caribbean. My mother left Grand Cayman when she was only a baby but my father grew up in Antigua. Both my parents love cooking but surprisingly they never made Caribbean food at home and there were no restaurants serving Caribbean food nearby. I recently tried Caribbean food for the first time when I moved to a new city to start university. I'm shocked that there aren't more Caribbean restaurants in Europe. Let me tell you why.

Caribbean food is delicious. There is plenty of choice for everyone. There are vegetarian dishes for non-meat eaters. There is spicy food for people who like it. There are a lot of fish recipes, and fruit and vegetables give lots of dishes a beautiful flavour.

Of course, the Caribbean isn't just one country. There are many different islands and they are all independent states. Most of them have English as a first or second language which is useful because of all the tourists who visit each year. Others have a French or Spanish influence and a lot of ideas and ingredients come from Africa.

So, what are some of the most popular dishes? You can find goat curry on many islands. It is spicy and delicious. Callaloo is another great dish, which comes from Africa. It is a vegetarian dish and a good example of how different islands have different ideas about their food. In Jamaica, they use callaloo leaves, salt, onions and green onions to make callaloo. In Trinidad, they use the leaves from the okra plant and they cook callaloo with coconut milk. It looks and tastes completely different but the name is the same!

One meal you have to try is ackee and saltfish. It's Jamaica's national meal. Be careful! You have to cook ackee properly because it can be dangerous. This is unusual for a fruit as they are usually safe. To be safe buy tinned ackee. You can find it at your local Caribbean food shop or online.
