Life-changing decisions: Living on a boat

Rita Schreiber interviews Donna Thompson about a life-changing decision.

A

I'd been stuck in a rut for a while before losing my job. I was making good money and I'd bought a spacious apartment in East London, but something was missing. Not to get all philosophical, but it felt like my life lacked meaning. So, in some ways it was a relief to be fired from the financial services company I worked for. I was told it was making cutbacks. It was not a pleasant experience. A security guard assisted me in packing my belongings in a cardboard box before escorting me from the office. It was so considerate of the company to provide that support …

B

After the initial shock of being fired so suddenly, I started to weigh up the situation. There was something liberating about this forced change but on the other hand, I wouldn't be able to afford my mortgage if I wasn't working. I'd need to find cheaper accommodation, but everything in London was incredibly expensive. That's when a friend suggested getting a boat. 'A boat?', I replied, 'I think that's a bit outside my comfort zone.' But as I thought about it more, I had a change of heart. There were plenty of places to moor one in the city and I could move whenever I wanted.

C

Having sold my apartment, I moved in with my parents temporarily. What I hadn't counted on was my dad, who thought I was being impulsive, trying to persuade me not to buy a boat. I stuck with my decision though. The boat I was looking for had to be in reasonable condition and suitable for navigating Britain's inland waterways. Surprisingly, it wasn't hard to find one already moored in London. It was a beautiful 18-metre canal boat called Ares, in perfect condition. I just had to sort out a licence and the insurance and it was all mine.

D

Space on board Ares was every bit as restricted as I'd expected. I didn't mind selling the exercise bike I'd hardly used or donating bags of old clothes to charity. More of a dilemma was what to do with my cat, Tiddles, who was very much a creature of habit. I couldn't see her adapting to life on a boat. In the end, my parents agreed to look after her. Apart from not having Tiddles around, the main difference of life on a boat is the amount of work that needs doing. It's way more than I'd imagined and there's always something that needs my attention.

E

Anyone thinking about living on a boat needs to be prepared for a lot of hard work. It can be costly if you get others to do it so you need to be a practical person who's handy with tools. I've learnt a lot about maintenance. People also forget how boat life can affect your relationships. When you do manage to find time to entertain, you've only got room for a couple of guests at a time. Having said that, they'll be delighted to spend time with you and will soon wonder whether to swap their houses for boats.
